This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

BUREAU OF STATISTICS, November 14, 1867.

SIR: In presenting to you the First* Annual Report which has been prepared in compliance with the act of July 28, 1866, I have deemed it advisable, as an introduction to a continuous series of similar documents, to commence with a brief sketch of the progress and changes through which the Statistical Bureau has reached its present condition. With a view, also, of rendering this Report as complete and useful as possible, an explanation is furnished of the internal organization of the Bureau, and the duties that devolve upon its various members; explanations which, once given, will not be needed again.

The desire for statistical information by the government of the United States is as old as the Constitution itself, which, Article 1, section 2, clause 3, in regulating representation and taxation, made provision for decennial censuses of the population.

Statistics of the shipping and foreign commerce of the country were first directed to be obtained and compiled by the law of February 10, 1820, which, except to the extent that it has been superseded by that of July 28, 1866, still remains in force. It provided for import, export, and navigation accounts, but made provision, in regard to the exports, for the filing of manifests by the shippers of the merchandise exported, only when the same was exported in "vessels," thus rendering it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to obtain accurate statistics of exports by railways or other land vehicles. Until the passage of the act of July 28, 1866, this, with the exception of the act of May 14, 1856, (inoperative,) requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare statistics of our coastwise commerce, was the only general provision of law relative to statistics of the commerce and navigation of the United States.

* The Annual Tables (Commerce and Navigation of 1866) though prepared for publication under the Director's supervision, and signed by him, were, in point of fact, compiled under the direction of the Register of the Treasury. The Annual Tables in this volume, (Commerce and Navigation, 1867) though compiled under the Director's supervision, were commenced before the creation of his office upon blank forms prepared and furnished, and under the plan or system practiced, by the Register.

Social and vital statistics were amply provided for in the census laws; the fiscal and other operations of government capable of quantitative illustration were required to be tabulated in the reports of the various executive departments; and accounts of the population, commerce, and industry of foreign countries were demanded by the acts of August 16, 1842, and August 18, 1856, which provided for periodical reports from our consuls abroad, and created a bureau in the State Department, whose province it was to compile, collate, and publish them. Finally, by the act of July 4, 1864, another bureau was established in the same department, part of whose function it was to periodically set forth the number and condition of persons emigrating to this country from abroad. Thus the laws made provision, not only for the statistics of our own country, but likewise for those of all other countries, and of the movement of population and commodities between.

Arranged in tabular form, the following were among the principal existing provisions of law on the subject:

TABLE I.

Statistics.	Periodicity of return.	How often to be published.	By or under whom to be prepared.
Public lands		At any time and annually	Commissioner of Land Office.
Navy Register		Annually	Secretary of the Navy.
Army Register		Annually	Secretary of War.
Coinage, deposits of bullion, mint operations, and statements of foreign coins and equivalent values.		Annually	Director of the Mint.
Patents		Annually	Commissioner of Patents.
Foreign commercial systems		Annually	Secretary of State.
Vital statistics		Annually	Bureau of Medicine and Surgery.
Public revenue, expenditures, and debt	Monthly and quarterly	Monthly and annually	Secretary of the Treasury.
Nautical statistics		Annually	Superintendent of Nautical Almanac.
Population, dwellings, value of real estate, occupation, births, marriages, school attendance, illiteracy, deaf, dumb, blind, insane, idiotic, &c.; improved and unimproved farms, and cash value of each kind; farming implements, live stock, and value; slaughtered animals; crops; home-made manufactures; industries and manufactures to the value of $500 a year and upwards; value of real and personal estate other than agricultural; taxes—State, municipal, and other; schools and colleges; libraries; newspapers; seasons and harvests; paupers; criminals; wages; religious worship; deaths.	June 1, 1850, and decennially thereafter.	Decennial census	Secretary of the Interior.
Steam navigation, casualties of, &c		Annually	President of Board of Supervising Inspectors of Steamboats.
Commercial relations		Annually	Secretary of State.
Foreign prices current			United States Consuls.
United States Official Register, (Blue Book)		Biennially	Secretary of the Interior.
Agriculture		Annually	Commissioner of Agriculture.
State, industrial, and economical statistics		Annually	Agricultural colleges benefited by act of July 2, 1862.
Taxes from manufactures, productions, slaughtered animals, receipts, sales, licenses, incomes, legacies, and successions; articles of luxury, bank circulation and deposits; passports, penalties, insurance companies, railroads, canals, and turnpikes; salaries of government officers, and stamps.			Commissioner of Internal Revenue.
Immigration		Annually	Commissioner of Immigration.
Taxation, trade, industry, and commerce			Special Commissioner of the Revenue.
Mining, intercommunication, and mining population			Secretary of the Treasury.
Imports, exports, in transit, indirect trade, warehousing, home consumption, carrying trade, shipping, manufactures,* sources of raw materials,* transportation,* wages,* trade,* and industry.*	Weekly, monthly, quarterly, and annually.	Monthly and annually	Register of the Treasury, (afterwards by the Director of the Bureau of Statistics.)

* These were added when the Bureau of Statistics was formed; but no provision of law was made for their rendition to the bureau, which has, therefore, to depend for them upon the courtesy of voluntary contributors.

Nothing more seemed requisite; and yet it was painfully evident that, at least so far as regards the Commerce and Navigation tables, instead of being relied upon as authority in such matters, our official reports, though distributed gratuitously, and in large numbers, were but rarely quoted, except to be confuted by the less pretentious, but obviously more correct, statistics of boards of trade, chambers of commeree, and other local organizations.

One of the greatest difficulties encountered from the outset has been to obtain exact and comprehensive information, and the Commission, as the result of their experience, feel warranted in asserting that no full and reliable statistics concerning any branch of trade or industry in the United States, with possibly a few exceptions, are now, or have ever been, available.

The census of 1860, only made available for detailed reference some four or five years after its enumeration, has been to the Commission of but little service. Nor do the statistics which have been furnished from time to time by the Treasury Department afford the knowledge of those facts which are so essential as a groundwork for the labors of the Commission.

This extract, quoted from the Report of the Revenue Commission of 1865–'66, was followed by examples of inaccurate returns, whose absurd character alone relieved them from the just consequences of the condemnation that followed their publicity. The various commercial organizations of the country and the press united in deploring the state of affairs thus exposed; and a universal desire, repeated for half a century in vain,* but now forced upon the attention of Con-

* "It may not be improper in this connection to express the opinion that the establishment of a permanent bureau of statistics would prove of inestimable advantage to the country. Such a bureau is maintained by every enlightened government of Europe, and the want of one here has been seriously felt by Congress and the people. Such a bureau has been frequently recommended by Presidents and heads of departments. Eighteen years since the subject was referred to a select committee of the House of Representatives, which made an able report, from which the following extracts are made:

"'The importance of statistical knowledge is proved by the circumstance that scarcely any civilized government exists in the world where a department or bureau has not been established for the purpose of collecting, recording, and arranging statistical facts, and for the dissemination of correct information upon the fiscal, commercial, agricultural, and manufacturing interests of the respective countries wherein such institutions are established. England, France, Austria, Prussia, Russia, Sweden, Belgium, &c., and several of the smaller powers of Germany and Italy, have, in some shape or other, and under various designations, long possessed the advantages of correct official information upon their several national statistics.

"'Correct and extensive statistical information is no less necessary to the mass of the people, in order that they may desire, appreciate, and understand correct legislation, than it is for the legislator to enable him to comprehend and to promote the best interests of his constituents. The want of such a bureau, or rather the want of the information which it would be the means of collecting and disseminating, has long been felt and acknowledged, and by none more than by those members of the national legislature who have been anxious to legislate correctly and impartially, and thereby best advance the true interests of the nation. In many cases the information which has been necessary, owing to the want of a systematic and regular arrangement of materials, cannot be procured but after very great delay; and, in some cases, no diligence or exertion of the department upon which the call has been made can furnish the necessary replies. There are now calls on some of the departments remaining unanswered which were made two years ago; and such is the quantity of extra labor thrown upon the departments by these calls for information, that, in one office, the number of extra clerks employed is greater than that of the regular clerks of the department.

"'Such a bureau would furnish correct information respecting the commercial, the financial, the navigating, the shipping, the manufacturing, and the agricultural interests of the country; a digested body of facts relative to the revenue, the custom-house, the post office, the land office, and the Indian department; correct statements respecting the population, the expenses and details of the army and navy, the progress of internal improvements, the state of banks and other institutions, and of monetary affairs and exchanges; and, in short, a regular, connected, and methodized arrangement of every subject to which facts and figures bear any relation, and which are in any way connected with the history, the progress, and the condition of the nation at large, and those of the various States and Territories. And here it may be remarked, that, by a full and complete arrangement of the prices of stocks, the rates of exchanges, the quantity of unemployed capital, as exhibited by the amount of deposits in banks, and other variations in the money market, the best opportunities for the execution of government financial operations would be ascertained, and the public interest materially promoted.

"'The duties of the bureau would extend to the arrangement, condensation, and elucidation of the statistics of foreign nations, and to all the various branches of international com-

gress through the immediate and practical needs of the government, was at length gratified by the creation of this Bureau by the act approved July 28, 1866, chap. 298, entitled "An act to protect the revenue, and for other purposes."

It was not until the 5th of September following that a presiding officer was appointed. The revision of the voluminous tables, then but lately transferred to the care of the Director of the Bureau by the Register of the Treasury; the preparation of a special report on Ship-building; and the compilation of a multitude of statistical tables, which were vigorously called for on all sides—at once attesting the essentiality and value of the organization, and the desire of legislators, functionaries, and public for information—afforded no opportunity for studying and remedying the defects of the then prevailing system until after the adjournment of Congress.

This event occurred on the 30th of March. On the 8th of May following, in a communication submitting for your consideration a comprehensive plan for compiling and keeping the departmental returns, I took occasion to remark that it was "difficult to successfully represent the confusion into which the business had fallen, and from which," I added, "it would take some time yet to emerge."

Numerous statistical tables had been called for both by law and regulation. Of these, but few—the import, export, re-export, indirect trade, and shipping tables—were regularly compiled and published; and these few were faulty, though to what extent faulty was not known, even by those who compiled them. A careful scrutiny has resulted in the discovery that in the imports were included the product of our fisheries, the guano brought from islands covered by our flag, and by law especially directed to be regarded as forming mercial intercourse, materials for which are daily accumulating, especially from consuls and other public agents abroad.'

"The labors of a statistical bureau would most essentially contribute to the increase of sound knowledge upon all subjects connected with national and international affairs among the people. The theories, often conflicting, of political economists would give place to the practical results of experience, the sober truth of figures, and the unerring demonstrations of facts.

"The true interests of the people of the country, as a people, one and indivisible, would be perceived and understood. Knowledge of the most important kind would be given to the community; additional power, the result of knowledge, be placed in the hands of the legislature; the welfare of the country advanced by its interests being better understood; and legislation would be consistent and onward, uniformly conducing to individual happiness and national honor and prosperity. It is hoped that nations will no longer seek to conquer by war or physical force, but by an honorable rivalry in the cultivation of the arts of peace, of commerce, of agriculture, of manufactures, and of science. Practical and useful information must be furnished to our people, to enable them to compete with other nations in their laudable career. The object of this bureau would be to furnish this information, and thus place the materials for sound thought, and the foundation for correct action, within the grasp of every American citizen. The committee above referred to closed their report with these words:

"'It is, therefore, respectfully submitted that the establishment of a statistical bureau would be a measure highly advantageous to the interests of the country, one of very easy and ready practicability, and productive of not only a saving of time and labor, but an absolute diminution of the annual expenses of the general government.'

"No words of mine could add force to such representations, which are doubly applicable in the present condition of the country.

"It may not inappropriately be added that the census has become so cumbersome on account of the vast area embraced within its operations, and the increasing numbers of population, and enlargement of our material interests, that its successful management demands administrative talent only to be acquired by experience, and must require most of the years of a decade for its completion. With the facilities this office possesses, it would add but little comparatively to its labors to prepare an annual report on population, agriculture, manufactures, commerce, internal improvements, &c., &c., while its permanent establishment would insure the maintenance of a valuable repository of statistical information important to the legislator and statesman. In my opinion, a permanent bureau of statistics, having charge of the census, would add but little to the expenses of the government, as its effect would be to obviate the necessity of employing the vast clerical force now requisite, because of their inexperience, and for the reason that the great statistical facts of the country are collected by the census but once in ten years."—Preliminary Report on the Census.

part of the coasting trade; and even a portion of the products of the State of Maine—as though the same had been received from foreign countries and were so many national purchases to be paid for with an export of money, credit, or trade. The entire Transit and Trans-shipment trade was likewise thrown into the import tables, sometimes counterbalanced by appropriate entries in the re-exports, but more often not.

The domestic exports were largely understated. Overland exports to Canada were but partially given. Domestic manufactures were included in the table of foreign re-exports. Sales of vessels to foreigners were entirely omitted; and defective statements—defective to the extent of millions of dollars—incorporated into the accounts, without comparison with the commercial records of outward manifests, nor with foreign tables of imports.

The tonnage returns were swelled with thousands of ghostly ships—ships that had gone to the bottom years ago. Newport swelled her coastwise movements with the daily arrivals and departures of the Sound steamers;* and, at some of the border districts, every time a ferry boat entered and left a slip, her tonnage, against a standing regulation of the department, found its way into the account of the foreign entrances and clearances.

Worse than all, the tables were not even consistently wrong; for while some of the returns contained these serious errors, others did not; and, as no distinction between them was known at the time, it is now too late to set the matter right without very costly researches. It will hardly be credited, but it is nevertheless true, that no complete list of the existing customs districts was in the possession of the division charged with the preparation of these tables. No distinction was made between districts that had reported no transactions and those that had failed to report whether they had had transactions or not; no comparisons were instituted between the official returns and others; and no correct blanks† nor modern book of instructions to be found anywhere.

Of the statistical tables demanded either by law or regulation, and not regularly compiled or published, one—the table of goods remaining in warehouse, ordered in act of August 6, 1846—had been compiled and published for two consecutive years, 1847 and 1848. It was taken up again in 1855, but framed to furnish no details of articles, and was only obtained from a few leading customs districts. Some of the other tables had been abandoned, yet never formally countermanded. A few of the districts therefore continued to send them in; and they were received by the Commerce and Navigation Division, whence they found their way into some obscure corner, neglected, and regarded as valueless. Some—for example, the Imports for Home Consumption and Impost table, ordered by Secretary Fessenden by letter of instructions dated October 21, 1864—had actually been forgotten; and the fact that the regulations demanded their rendition was only discovered last spring, and by a personal search among the files of the old Division. These tables now form some of the most important in the possession of the Bureau.

On the other hand, the custom-houses were given to the strangest errors—errors, too, for which the Commerce and Navigation Division of the Register's office was in no way responsible. The collector of Pembina‡ reported that he had erroneously returned imports for exports, because he had a felon on his finger. Mobile included a million and a half of coastwise shipments in its exports. New York returned large importations of mother-of-pearl shells, under the heading of "Specimens of natural history," and the collector of Burlington declared that the past returns from his office had been "mere guess-work."

* Letter of collector, dated October 6, 1867.

† Quantities of expensive blanks, printed prior to the creation of this bureau, have been delivered to the superintendent of the Treasury building as waste-paper. They were so faulty as to be entirely useless.

‡ Letter of collector, dated August 10, 1867.

As for attempting to portray the chronic confusion of arrangement and arithmetical inaccuracy that, with little or no exception, distinguished all the returns, it were useless. Those which resulted most seriously are noticed under the specific heads of Imports, Exports, Warehouse, Imposts, Shipping, &c.

After ascertaining as near as possible the true condition of affairs, I set about remedying them. The course taken was to break up the system of too great division of labor into which the Division (now the Bureau) had fallen, to create an improved organization of the force employed; to adopt a complete set of tables from among the many warranted by law and regulation; to draw up and print detailed instructions and improved tabular forms, and supply them to the custom-houses, not for samples, as before, but in sufficient quantity for use,* and to inform those connected with the business, both in the Bureau and at the custom-houses, by means of printed letters, forms, and instructions, of all that was to be done.

I felt confident that clear and comprehensive instructions concerning what was required, and what not, would prove one of the most effectual means of all; and in this I have not been disappointed. All the returns are now received from all the districts, and, with few exceptions, in fair time. As near as may be, in the first year of such numerous and radical changes, they each contain what they should contain, all of it, but nothing more; and they collectively embrace all the information (except the coasting trade returns, to compile which would demand considerable addition to the force at present employed) capable of being furnished by the custom-houses.

It remains to provide for a system of actual valuations, to improve upon the present forms of entry, to introduce a better classification of commodities, and to make good the defect mentioned in the law of February 10, 1820, respecting export manifests. Our custom-house statistics will then rank with those of any other country in the world.

The Director would have wished at the outset to take the accounts rendered by the various offices of the government, and "digest and arrange" them for the use of the executive departments and the houses of Congress, and also to obtain and publish statistics of manufactures, mines, and the other important industrial interests of our country; but, for some time yet, this will be impracticable. The law provides neither mode nor means for the Director to obtain any original statistics, except those of foreign commerce. This as to one point; as to the other: to collate and arrange statistics requires officers and clerks qualified in each special branch of knowledge. Such persons are not easily found; and a single effort convinced me of the hopelessness of creditably accomplishing tasks of this general character without trained aid. The law made the compilation of the statistics of commerce and navigation the especial duty of the Director, and this of itself was so heavy a task that it occupied all the clerical force which the department could well assign for this purpose. There were thirty-one male and fifteen female clerks employed in this Bureau on the 30th of September last. To attempt a systematic collation and digest of the publications of the other offices of the government, with so slight a force as this, was out of the question.

There was still another reason why such an attempt was rendered impossible. I allude to the condition into which the commerce and navigation tables had fallen. Above all things it seemed necessary to get these right before attempting anything else; and accordingly my efforts were mainly addressed to the technical management and arrangement of these important accounts. As yet no attempt has been made to correct the errors in the statistics of past years, nor to incorporate in them the foreign transactions that occurred in the blockaded States during the war, and which as yet have been entirely overlooked. The footings of 1862 are still unbalanced, and many other accounts remain disfigured by important alterations, omissions, and errors, which were made during a period when the Register's time was engrossed by the more pressing duties incidental to the issue of government bonds and currency.

* This plan was adopted not only to secure that necessary uniformity, without which such numerous and complex returns could not well be compiled, but also as a measure of economy. Instead of 125 (the number of custom districts and surveyorships) bills for the printing and supply of blanks, the government has now to pay but one bill, the whole amount of which for the year last past (there being over fifty different blanks in use, some of them eighty double folio pages long) was but $11,252. The economy thus effected is believed to be sufficient to largely cover the expense of conducting the Bureau.

The regular tables specifically enjoined in the various acts applicable to this Bureau are as follows:

TABLE II.

	No. of tables.		No. of tables.
Import entries	5	Warehouse, monthly	1
Indirect trade	2	Footings and districts of tables	12
In transit and transshipment trade	2	List of vessels, annually	1
Navigation	5	Manufactures, annually	1
Foreign re-exports	5
Domestic exports	5	Total	40
Fisheries, quarterly	1

In addition to these, there are compiled in the Bureau the following:

	No. of tables.		No. of tables.
Liquidations	2	Population, annually	1
Navigation	3	Number of tax-payers, annually	1
Immigration	4	Railroads, annually	1
Deaths of immigrant passengers	2	Prices of wages, annually	1
Home consumption and imposts	2	Cotton crop, annually	1
Fisheries	1	Transfers of real estate, annually	1
Guano	1	State of credit, annually	1

Interoceanic	6	Sales of vessels to foreigners	1
New York weekly custom-house reports for the press	1	Education, annually	1
Footings and districts of warehouse tables, monthly	9	Total	42

In all, some eighty odd tables, most of them occupying from one to twelve imperial volumes each, beside the reports of foreign consuls and digests of foreign tariffs published in the monthly reports of the Bureau, and the innumerable sheet tables prepared from time to time for the departments, members of Congress, and others.

The internal organization of the Bureau is as follows:

TABLE III.

Number of clerks, September 30, 1867.

			Males.	Females.
Director.	Chief Clerk.	First division: Compilation—Foreign commodities	9	5
		Second division: Compilation—Domestic commodities	6	2

		Fourth division: Preparation and revision	4	..
		Fifth division: Publication and library	5	..
		Director's office: Supervision, files, and mails	2	..
			31	15

A division devoted to Manufactures and Internal Traffic has since been created. The organization, though only formally adopted a few months since, has proved very effective in introducing harmony and precision in the work. The regular records are kept in the Compiling Divisions, and the unattached clerks are employed on miscellaneous and temporary business, compiling sheet tables, &c. The entire product of these divisions, when finished, is submitted to the revision of the Fourth Division, and, after passing the Director's scrutiny, is handed to the Fifth Division for publication. The clerks are employed interchangeably, now in one division, now in another, and in this manner are afforded opportunities to become interested in and to learn the whole range of the business. Formerly this was not the case. Division of labor was carried to such an extent that, while each clerk was conversant with his particular account, he possessed no familiarity with any of the others. Under such a system no careful comparison of accounts was possible, and the whole work was contradictory; nothing agreed, and nobody was to blame for it.

The following tables serve to illustrate the confusion and error which resulted partly from this system and partly from other causes.

The sums quoted from the manuscript tables are as they stood in ink on the 14th November, 1867. The pages are so disfigured with pencil and scratcher that to determine the total sum is a matter of difficulty, and in some cases the very last additions are so plainly incorrect that it is puzzling whether to quote the total as it stands, or as it obviously should stand. The former, however, has been the alternative adopted. The authorities are quoted in order, as follows: First, the Finance report, which is published each year before the tables are "balanced;" next the Commerce and Navigation report, which is published when the tables are completed; and lastly, the tables themselves, to which are sometimes added returns received too late for publication in the annual reports.

It will be noticed, that after being variously stated during the period 1861–'64 at from three hundred and thirty-four to three hundred and fifty-two millions, the imports of 1861 are stated in 1865 at two hundred and eighty-six millions.

The imports of 1862, stated in five different authorities at two hundred and five millions, are stated in two others at two hundred and seventy-five millions. The imports of 1863 are variously stated as between two hundred and fifty-two million one hundred thousand, and two hundred and fifty-two million nine hundred thousand; in those of 1864, there is a million difference, and in those of 1865 over fourteen millions.

I forbear to allude any further to these discrepancies. Yet, large as they are, they dwindle to insignificance when compared with the discrepancies in the export accounts. In these the differences amount to much larger sums. The Finance report of 1863, for example, states the exports of 1861 at three hundred and eighty-nine millions; while the Finance report of 1865 states them at but two hundred and twenty-eight millions, a difference of one hundred and sixty-one millions. The discrepancies in the exports of 1863 amount to eighteen millions, and in those of 1864 to forty millions.

All this is now changed. Each division consists of several classes and grades of functionaries, with a rising scale of duties and remuneration. As far as possible advancement is made to depend upon the talent, fitness, and industry of the individual; and few who have exhibited these qualities have failed to receive it. At the same time I have never hesitated, however unpleasant the task, to dispense with the services of those persons who, though perhaps sufficiently well adapted for other duties, proved on trial to be ill fitted for those of statisticians; to be wanting in patience, exactness, general reading, or some other essential qualification. With this system of organization each person may look to reaching in the course of time the highest position in his special branch of the public service, with a certainty and rapidity as exactly proportioned to his merits and experience as the nature of the case and the fallibility of human judgment will allow, subject, of course, to such mutations of office as are common to our government.

In reference to this, however, I cannot refrain from observing that statistical work is of so technical a nature, and for correctness depends so much upon experience, that the government cannot fail to suffer by change of such officers. The tenure of their office should therefore be as certain as it can be made, so that they may come to regard their occupation as a permanent profession, and not merely a make-shift for the time. Without this it is vain to look for earnest and intelligent co-operation.

In connection with the subject of organization and statistical training, I may state that, with the view to ascertain and demonstrate the fitness of this Bureau to take the decennial census, and at the same time to gradually train our widely diffused organization of tax officers eventually to perform this duty, and incidentally to furnish the Bureau with certain statistics called for in the law organizing it, but for the rendition of which no provision of law was made, I set on foot a regular series of inquiries addressed to assessors and assistant assessors throughout the country, and take great pleasure in announcing that the effort has met with much success. Through the co-operation of these officers, always rendered cheerfully and promptly, a census of the entire country was obtained in November, 1866; the price of wages in fifty-four different occupations, and in over three thousand localities, ascertained; and during the past summer an estimate prepared of the current cotton crop.

The census exhibited the following approximate results:

It awaits collation, and cannot, therefore, be given for the present in greater detail, nor with more precision. A portion of the wages table was printed in the February number (No. 3) of the monthly reports of the Director. The remainder is so volumnious that it cannot at present be collated and prepared for publication.

The cotton crop table exhibits the following results:

TABLE VII.

Number of States growing cotton.	Number of internal revenue divisions reported.	Number of acres sown in cotton, 1867.	Estimated yield, bales of four hundred pounds.
Thirteen, and one Territory	*539	5,497,660	1,934,200

*A number of divisions wherein cotton is believed to have been grown, failed to report.

Upon the precise correctness of these returns I am not at present prepared to express an opinion. It may be well to remark, however, that the commonly received estimate by those best qualified to judge is about 2,500,000 bales. Whether the result of extended observation without practice will be a better estimate than that derived from limited observation with practice remains to be seen. It is thought proper to give both results. See reports of Special Commissioner of Revenue for 1867, page 89, and of Commissioner of Agriculture for October, 1867, page 317.

When it is remembered, however, what an extensive area they cover, how numerous were their sources, and how comparatively reliable their results, even upon a first trial, it appears evident that the next decennial census could be placed in no better hands than those of the Treasury Department. The permanent nature of the internal revenue organization affords time and opportunity for the necessary statistical instruction and discipline to be given and acquired, and would insure greater accuracy in the result and entail less expense upon the country.

I have also inaugurated a system of international exchanges with the statistical bureaux of other countries. The printed publications of the Bureau have been regularly transmitted, among others, to the following officers, and in return I have received from them statistical publications of much interest and value. These have been placed in the library for reference.

L. M. C. Becker, chief of bureau of statistics, Oldenburg, North Germany.
R. S. M. Bouchette, commissioner of customs, Quebec, Canada.
Josiah Boothby, government statistician, Adelaide, South Australia.
There are over forty others, besides a large number of auxiliary bureaux.

A like system of exchanges has been inaugurated with the statistical bureaux and executive officers of the States of this Union, and with several hundred newspapers published in various parts of the country, of which the most important are kept on file in the library; finally, with the United States consuls residing abroad, who in return furnish the Bureau with foreign prices current, stock lists and other commercial information, all of which are kept for reference in the library, and the principal ones published in the monthly reports.

The library has also been inaugurated under my supervision. It contains some 3,000 volumes, (2,957 is the exact number,) consisting entirely of sociological, politico-economical, statistical, commercial and financial works and periodicals, and official reports of our own government and others.

The statistical and politico-economical sections are very complete, and the whole forms a technical collection of practical value, and in constant requisition. It is under the efficient care of Rev. D. B. Nichols.

This library was formed by withdrawing some 500 volumes on statistics and political economy from the Treasury library, by gleanings from the attic and lumber rooms of the Treasury building, by exchange with and donations from public officers at home and abroad, and by purchase; the total expenditure having been $1,761 16. The number of books purchased was 412; donated, 1,227; obtained from Treasury library files, &c., 1,318.

Another collection, and one entirely without expense to the government, has grown up under my hands. It consists of samples of commercial commodities, of which an excellent collection has been obtained from the custom-houses. The samples are neatly put up and sealed, and labelled with their commercial nomenclature, tariff classification, date of importation, sworn value, and rate of duty assessed. They will be of great practical service in all matters relating to classification.*

The numbering of vessels enjoined in the act of July 28, 1866, is being rapidly pushed forward. The numbers have been given out, and a list of the merchant vessels of the United States is in press. This list will doubtless require considerable alteration before it is correct. It is presumed that this will be accomplished before another year. Once correct, it will not be difficult to keep it correct, and it will then form a valuable addition to our blue book literature.

An international statistical congress was held on the 9th of October last at Florence, Italy, an invitation to attend which was extended to the Director of this Bureau, in common with the representatives of other governments. The official demands upon his time were, however, of too urgent a nature to be disregarded, and the invitation was respectfully declined. The proceedings of the congress have not yet been received.

COMMERCE OF 1867.

With the exception of the year immediately preceding, our foreign commerce during the 12 months which closed on the 30th of June last was larger than in any previous year.

* "Great difficulties exist as regards the classification of imports in successive years, and in the comparison, even through this short period, of the leading articles, particularly of dry goods. The terms of the tariff acts control the schedule absolutely, and when the law opens an indefinite heading it is impossible to preserve distinctions. Mixed fabrics of wool, cotton, silk, and linen, are the most imperfect as regards classification, although articles made of any textile material capable of personal wear are almost impossible to trace. Hosiery, shawls, gloves, caps, handkerchiefs, and all like articles, of whatever material composed, are capable of such diversity of entry, and are, in fact, entered so diversely, as to preclude definite comparison through this period. It will be seen that large aggregates entered in 1859–'60 as cotton, silk, or woollen hosiery, disappear entirely in 1862 and 1863. The importation did not cease, or sensibly decline, but it is impossible to tell under what heads the values may be found, except that they are in some one of the entries of fabrics of these materials not specified, or under clothing as 'articles worn.'

"In many cases, it should also be said, the entry as here distinguished is still deficient and short of the whole importation. This is the case with many drugs and chemicals, at some of the custom-houses the values being placed with the general total of drugs or chemicals not specified, instead of being reported in detail."—Com. and Nav. Report, 1863, p. 641.

The year ended June 30, 1866, it will be remembered, was that in which the war closed, and the southern ports were reopened to commerce. The activity of our foreign trade during that period must therefore be regarded as entirely abnormal, and the fact that during the succeeding year it was less, does not prove an average falling off. On the contrary, the commerce of the year 1867 was 152 millions larger than the annual average of the period 1861–'66, inclusive, which was 574 millions. The impetus exhibited in 1866 has been better maintained than there was reason to expect, and the large trade of 1867 is due most likely to the steady growth of the country, the rapid filling up of its western lands by immigration, and the gradual adaptation of the industrial classes of the south to the newer and wider fields of enterprise which a changed and bettered social organization has opened to them; it being remarkable, despite the apparently unsettled condition of affairs in that section of the country, that it has furnished in value nearly seven-tenths of the entire exports of this year.

Total exports southern products during fiscal year ended June 30, 1867, currency value, (approximate)	328,406,757
Total exports domestic products from the United States during fiscal year ended June 30, 1867, currency value	471,608,000

Proportion of southern products to all domestic products exported, 69 per cent.

Gold and silver are included with other products.

These figures must not be regarded as exact, but only approximate; because the total exports from the southern Atlantic and Gulf ports, including Baltimore, include more or less of northern products, which cannot be distinguished from the rest without considerable labor.

* Process, (1862 to 1866.)—Except in the imports, the merchandise is separated from the specie, the latter is reckoned as specie, and the former reduced to specie at the following rates: 1862, 1.016; 1863, 1.371; 1864, 1.564; 1865, 2.02; 1866, 1.41, and 1867, 1.41. From the imports (specie value) are deducted the re-exports, (the merchandise at two-thirds specie value and one-third currency reduced to specie,) and to the remainder is added the domestic exports, (the merchandise, all currency value, reduced to specie value.) The process for 1867 is slightly different, as it comprehends the fact that the merchandise exports from the Pacific ports are returned in specie. For details see Monthly Report No. 8, of the Director of the Bureau of Statistics. Full reliance is not to be placed on the correctness of the figures from 1856 to 1865.

Cotton still maintains its ascendancy as an export staple. If our commerce and navigation tables up to 1866 are to be credited, the cotton exported during the past fiscal year, though less in quantity, nearly equals in value that of any previous year, and indeed exceeds that of all the years but 1859, 1860, and 1866.

The following table exhibits the exports of cotton from the United States for the past twelve years:

TABLE XI.

Exports of cotton from the United States from July 1, 1855, to June 30, 1866, inclusive, as stated in the reports of the Register of the Treasury on commerce and navigation, and for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1867, as shown by the records of the Bureau of Statistics.

Year ended June 30.	Pounds.	As reported in currency.	Reduced to gold.
1856	1,351,431,701		$128,382,351
1857	1,048,282,475		131,575,859
1858	1,118,624,012		131,386,661
1859	1,386,468,556		161,434,923
1860	1,767,686,338		191,806,555
1861	307,516,099		34,051,483
1862	5,010,011	$1,180,113	1,161,243
1863	11,384,986	6,652,405	4,846,925
1864	11,992,911	9,895,854	6,323,229
1865	8,294,374	6,816,400	3,384,356
1866	650,572,829	281,385,223	199,563,987
1867	666,576,314	202,911,410	143,908,801

It is worthy of remark in this place that a comparison of values does not furnish a strictly accurate view of the relative importance in which cotton stands as an export staple between 1867 and 1860, for the reason that prices have considerably risen all over the world since 1860; consequently, $143,000,000, even in gold, would not purchase quite the same amount of foreign produce as it would have done in 1860. The rise in prices alluded to is due to a number of causes, the principal of which are, the increase of production over consumption of the precious metals, and the cost of the civil war, and indeed of all other wars which have occurred since 1860, increasing through the agency of taxation the cost prices of all commercial commodities. Nevertheless, so far as the last named cause applies to the prices of the commodities which the United States sell or purchase, it is for the most part only to be observed as yet in the prices of those which form the burden of our traffic with the principal commercial nations of the world—the prices of products in remote countries, and those with which we and other leading commercial nations have but little trade, not having yet been fully affected by this influence.

In another relation, too, a comparison of prices may be deemed objectionable; for example, the cotton exports of 1860 were valued on exportation at about eleven (11) cents a pound, and this valuation may have been fully realized on the sale of the cotton in Europe. The cotton exports of 1867 were valued on the average at 21¾ cents gold on exportation, and this valuation, owing to the well-known fall in cotton that occurred during the latter months of the calendar year 1866, and the first months of 1867, may be thought not to have been realized on sale. This point, however, has been subjected to examination, and the result is, that the cotton exported during the past fiscal year realized on sale in Great Britain considerably more than the gold value at which it was exported.

The export of cotton to Great Britain during the 12 months ended June 30, 1867, according to our accounts, was 524,320,348 pounds, valued at $161,021,504 currency, equal to $114,199.649 in gold, or 30 1/10 cents currency per pound, equal to 21¾ cents in gold. The import of cotton into Great Britain from the United States during the 12 months ended July 31, 1867, (a month's difference of time is allowed for the voyage,) was, according to the British official accounts, 524,267,520 pounds, the computed real value of which was £28,207,940; at $4 84 per £, equal to $136,526,429, or 26 cents per pound.

TABLE XII.

The quantity of raw cotton imported into Great Britain from the United States during the 12 months ended July 31, 1867, as stated in the "accounts relating to trade and navigation of the United Kingdom," was cwt	4,680,960
Bales of four hundred pounds each	1,310,669
Pounds	524,267,520
The computed real value of the above was £28,207,940. This, at $4 84 to the pound sterling, equals	$136,526,429

Showing an average price per pound, in gold, of 26 cents. [No distinction is made in regard to sea-island or other kinds, nor is the declared value given.]

According to the United States customs returns, as shown by the records of the Bureau of Statistics, the quantity of raw cotton exported to Great Britain from the United States during the 12 months ended June 30, 1867, was 524,320,348 pounds.*

The declared value of which, on exportation, was in United States currency	$161,021,504
Equal in gold, at the monthly rate upon the monthly quantities exported, to	$114,199,649

Showing an average price per pound in United States currency of 30.7 cents, or in gold of 21¾ cents.

Furthermore, it should not be forgotten that, owing to the late depression in the dry goods trade of this country, the imports of dry goods from Great Britain, France, &c., during the same period, probably failed to realize on sale, by a considerable difference, the prices at which they were valued on entry. Moreover, the diminution of our foreign commerce since 1866 has been mainly in exports, the imports having fallen off but one-third of the total decrease, while the exports fell two thirds.†

* The remarkable agreement of quantity between the British accounts of cotton imports and those of exports compiled in this bureau, during the past year, is worthy of attention.

British Board of Trade accounts: imports of cotton from the United States, 12 months, pounds	524,267,520
United States Bureau of Statistics' accounts: exports of cotton to Great Britain, 12 months, pounds	524,320,348
Difference	52,828

Or about 132 bales.

† On the other hand, the domestic exports for the first half of the fiscal year 1868 are in excess of those for the corresponding period of the previous year by over twenty-six million dollars, specie value.

Vast as our commerce remains, it is now, for the most part, carried on in foreign vessels, and this despite every effort we have made to produce a contrary result. This subject was alluded to at full length in my report to you on the progress of ship-building in the United States, dated November 15, 1866, and printed during the following month.

Our foreign trade of 1866 and 1867, respectively, was carried on as follows:

TABLE XIV.

Carriage of foreign trade of 1866 and 1867.—Gold values in millions of dollars.

Fiscal years.	In American vessels and vehicles.	Per cent.	In foreign vessels and vehicles.	Per cent.	Total.	Per cent.
1866	263	31	583	69	846	100
1867	229.4	31.6	496.6	68.4	726	100

The slight relative improvement shown is more superficial than real as to American vessels; the carriage performed in vessels and vehicles, respectively, not being distinguishable.

One feature of our foreign trade deserves especial mention in this place. I allude to the new route which has been inaugurated for the transmission of the precious metals from our Pacific coast to their ultimate destination in Asia. For several years past there has been a noticeable movement of treasure westward from San Francisco. In 1865, during the nine months ended September 30, this movement amounted to about six millions of dollars; in 1866 to about five millions of dollars; while in 1867, during the corresponding period, it amounted to over seven and a quarter millions of dollars, the principal increase having occurred during the last three months of the period.

For a more careful analysis and comparison of the statistics of 1867, I beg to refer you to the specific reports on imports, liquidations, home consumption, customs, warehousing, re-exports, domestic exports, in-transit trade, indirect trade, fisheries, guano trade, foreign trade of the world, shipping and carrying trade, numbering of vessels, immigration and emigration, treatment of immigrant passengers, inter-oceanic trade and Pacific railroad, education, manufactures, wages, cost of raw materials, markets, &c., which will appear in the monthly reports as fast as they can be prepared. The report on domestic exports is given herewith.

DOMESTIC EXPORTS OF THE UNITED STATES.*

The exports of the United States consist of two classes of commodities:

1. Commodities, the growth, produce, and manufacture of the United States.
2. Commodities, the growth, produce, and manufacture of foreign countries. (Re-exports.)

The export statistics of the United States are provided for by the law of February 10, 1820, which (§ 11) enacts:

Before a clearance shall be granted for any vessel bound to a foreign place, the owners, shippers, or consignors of the cargo on board of such vessel shall deliver to the collector manifests of the cargo, or the parts thereof shipped by them respectively, and shall verify the same by oath or affirmation; and such manifests shall specify the kinds and quantities of the articles shipped by them respectively, and the value of the total quantity of each kind of articles; and such oath or affirmation shall state that such manifest contains a full, just, and true account of all articles laden on board of such vessel by the owners, shippers, or consignors, respectively, and that the values of such articles are truly stated according to their actual cost, or the values which they truly bear at the port and time of exportation; and, before a clearance shall be granted for any such vessel, the master of every such vessel and the owners, shippers, and consignors of the cargo shall state, upon oath or affirmation, to the collector, the foreign place or country in which such cargo is truly intended to be landed; and the said oaths or affirmation shall be taken and subscribed in writing.

The mode by which this Bureau is informed of the exports for a given period is the filing of these manifests of foreign-bound freight with the customs collector at the port of departure. From these documents tabular statements are compiled monthly and quarterly by the collectors, and forwarded to the Bureau. If any commodities find their way out of the country without having been duly cleared at a custom-house, they will, of course, not be found among the official accounts of exports.

Until within the year 1867 the official accounts of the domestic exports failed to include several large and important classes of commodities, amounting, altogether, to many millions of dollars annually; while, on the contrary, they comprised, to a small extent, some classes of commodities not properly belonging to domestic exports.

These errors proceeded mainly from the following causes:

I. A defect in the law of 1820 relative to exports by railway.
II. A defect in the law of 1820 relative to marine clearances.
III. Illicit traffic.
IV. Defective forms of export manifests.
V. Defective statistical blanks.

I. The first defect in the law of 1820 is contained in the following clause: "Before a clearance shall be granted for any vessel bound to a foreign place," &c.

This is the provision of law for manifests of outward-bound cargoes, and yet it only provides that export manifests shall be delivered to the customs collector in cases of shipment by vessel. Nothing is said of railway carriages or other land vehicles. It is true that when the law was passed there were no railway carriages in vogue; nevertheless a considerable portion of the foreign trade of the United States (across our land frontier) was even then transported, as some of it is still, on wagons, sleds, and other land vehicles; while at the present day our export traffic to British North America by railway is quite large.

For example, during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1867, according to the trade and navigation tables of the province of Canada, p. 159, the imports of United States produce from our country into Canada were, in specie value: of merchandise, $14,600,072, and of specie, $6,211,752; total, $20,811,824, specie value; equal—at $1 41 in paper currency for the merchandise, the average for the year, and par for the specie—to $26,827,054, United States mixed currencies. This is for Canada alone, the statistics of the other British North American provinces not having been received at the Bureau. The amount exhibited is believed to be rather under the truth, as some of the merchandise from the United States is supposed to be smuggled into the provinces. Yet, incomplete as it is, it exceeds the amount ($12,442,135) of domestic exports from the United States to Canada during the same period, as reported to this Bureau, by $14,384,919, mixed currencies, or more than 100 per cent.

This difference is due to the defect mentioned, and represents the merchandise which was not cleared at the frontier custom-houses, and which consequently failed to appear in our export statistics.

The following table exhibits the difference between the Canadian accounts of imports and our accounts of exports, for three years past:

The United States Treasury regulations of 1857 contain the following provisions:

ARTICLE 292. The regulations prescribed in chapter vii, relative to commercial statistics, will be, in all respects, complied with by collectors of frontier districts, so far as they are applicable. Attention is particularly directed to the necessity of correct returns of imports and exports. The former may be ascertained from the entries made by importers, and for the ascertainment of the latter the master of every vessel or boat, and the conductor of every railroad or other carriage, will be required to produce a manifest of all articles laden on board such vessel, boat, or carriage, to which manifest he shall swear or affirm, in the manner pointed out in the 11th section of the act of February 10, 1820, entitled "An act to provide for obtaining accurate statements of the foreign commerce of the United States."*

ART. 293. The manifest should contain a particular account of the marks, numbers, description of package and contents, and the value should be stated according to the fact, under the column of domestic or foreign production. As merchandise of the growth or production of the United States can only be reimported free of duty on proof that it was duly cleared out, and that no bounty or drawback had been allowed on the same, the necessity for the production of this manifest becomes obvious. Persons forwarding goods of the growth or production of the United States to Canada, or other adjacent foreign territory, can only secure the right of bringing such goods back by complying with these requirements.

Until very lately these particular articles of the regulations were almost entirely disregarded in practice. It should, however, be stated that the collectors are far from being clothed with the power necessary to enforce them; and this leads to a consideration of the other defect in the law of 1820, above adverted to.†

II. It will be observed that, although collectors of customs are forbidden to grant a clearance for any vessel bound to a foreign place, unless full manifests of the cargo are previously furnished, there is no penalty in case a vessel obtains a clearance and departs without furnishing a full manifest. A comparison of our exports with the imports officially reported by the principal countries with which we trade, and a detailed examination of the export manifests at some of our large ports, established the fact that this is not unfrequently the case. For example, the bark O—— H—— cleared from New York for Havana last spring with 1,499 packages of merchandise on board, of which no mention was made in her outward manifest, as certified by the Spanish consul in New York. The account of this shipment was forwarded to this Bureau upon request of the Director, by the United States consul at Havana, under date of June 26, 1867, the case having attracted attention through a newspaper paragraph, which noticed the detention of the vessel at Havana upon a charge of attempting to defraud the Spanish revenue. The British steamship G—— E—— cleared in 1866–7 rom New York with a valuable cargo, a portion of which, it is believed, was not reported to the custom-house upon clearance. In this happened to be some lard, which, not finding a desirable market in Europe, was returned to this country, and offered for entry free of duty as produce of the United States brought back. It being requisite in such cases to furnish evidence of the origin of the merchandise, the fact came to light that the lard had not been duly cleared when it was exported. In common with other similar shipments it had failed of course to find its way into the accounts of domestic exports compiled in this department. Other instances of the kind will be noticed in the report on Foreign Re-exports.

* The form of manifest and oath was modified and improved by letter approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, September 12, 1867, and alluded to elsewhere herein.

† The departmental letter of May 11, 1865, addressed to the collector of Detroit, exempts from clearance the ferry-boats plying to Canada in connection with the provincial railroads, terminating opposite that point and opposite Port Huron.

In citing these illustrations it is not to be supposed that the weekly accounts compiled at the New York and other custom-houses, for the convenience of the local press, were to be relied upon where the departmental tables were not. On the contrary, they were even less reliable, because, although they were made up from the same data, (the custom-house clearance manifests,) they were hastily compiled, and were deficient in details of quantities. Besides, as they were furnished weekly, they failed to cover even or exact monthly, quarterly, or annual periods, and so were of impaired value for purposes of comparison with any other tables; and they still remain so. While sufficiently answering the purposes for which they were intended, (that of supplying commercial information roughly true,) they in no manner came within the sphere of correct statistics. Until within the past quarter, moreover, the New York port recapitulations generally abounded with arithmetical errors. To remedy this, the clerk in charge was placed under the direct supervision of this Bureau, and his statements have since been carefully revised and corrected.

The difficulty of obtaining correct export statistics is neither new nor peculiar to this country. In the third report of the British Commissioners of Customs, 1859, pp. 16 and 17, occur the following remarks:

So much exertion has of late been made, and so much expense has been incurred, for the sake of procuring ample and accurate statistics of the commerce of the country, that we feel it desirable to direct your lordship's attention to one source of error which calls loudly for removal. The records of our exports are by no means to be relied upon, either for quantities or values; though, as it is probable that the accounts of one year are not more incorrect than those of another, they may afford a fair enough approximation for the mere purpose of comparison and for estimating the increase or decrease of aggregate amounts.

The inaccuracies signalized arise from various sources. Exports being now wholly free, and the revenue, therefore, being in no degree concerned in the correctness of the returns, shippers are careless, even to recklessness, in the figures and values which they furnish. A cipher added or omitted is sometimes considered of little consequence; thousands of pounds are entered instead of hundreds, and vice versa. Exporters often endeavor, and not unfrequently with success, to ship their goods without clearance, in order to avoid the knowledge of their transactions which might be obtained through the Bill of Entry Office; and still more frequently they neglect to give proper details for the clearance of their goods, so that the particulars have to be guessed at and are described at random by the parties entering them. In this manner foreign free goods are sometimes entered as British manufactures. Lastly, free goods cleared for shipment by lighters are at once carried to account as shipped; and if "shut out' from the vessel for which they were designed, and subsequently forwarded by another, are cleared and carried to account a second time, and again figure in the list of exports. Occasionally goods have thus been recorded three times over.

In dissecting a file of shipping bills, and comparing them with the cargo book after the vessel had sailed, we have found—

1. A large quantity of goods cleared, but not actually shipped.
2. A large quantity actually shipped, but never cleared.
3. Several articles cleared twice—first by the exporter, and again by the person supplying them.

With a view of remedying, or at least diminishing, these inaccuracies, we have directed our solicitor to prepare a short act for the consideration of your lordships, compelling shippers to correct their entries for goods cleared but not shipped, within three days after the sailing of the vessel from which they were shut out, under a penalty of £20; and also to add a "declaration" at the foot of the shipping bill, certifying to the correctness of the description therein given of the goods enumerated. These two simple enactments, with a slight addition to the number of officers in our export department, in order to watch over their enforcement, will, we hope, go far to correct our statistical returns. But a considerable apparent reduction in the aggregate exports from the United Kingdom will probably be the result.

With scarcely any modification, these remarks, in all their details, are applicable to the state of affairs here to-day, and accordingly I have the honor to submit for your consideration, and that of Congress, the following act as a measure of reform:

A BILL to amend the eleventh section of an act entitled "An act to provide for obtaining accurate statements of the foreign commerce of the United States," approved February tenth, eighteen hundred and twenty.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the requirements of the eleventh section of the act entitled "An act to provide for obtaining accurate statements of the foreign commerce of the United States," approved February 10, 1820, in regard to vessels and their cargoes, be, and the same are hereby, extended to vehicles of every kind and their lading, bound to any foreign place.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in case of the neglect on the part of the owners, shippers, forwarders, or consignors of the cargo, or lading, or the parts thereof, shipped or laden by them respectively on board of such vessel or vehicle, to furnish the manifest or parts of manifest, as provided for in said act, the collector of the customs district out of which such cargo or lading of commodities is intended to be exported shall cause the same to be detained and examined, and a manifest or manifests to be prepared as aforesaid, the said detention to cease when the actual cost of preparing such manifest shall have been paid by the owner, shipper, forwarder, or consignor aforesaid.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That before a clearance shall be granted to any foreign-bound vessel, the master thereof shall report to the collector of customs in writing the total number of passengers taken on board of said vessel to be carried to any foreign port or place, which report shall specify the sexes of said passengers, the total number of those under eight years of age, and the total number who were cabin passengers, according to the following form:

Statement of the number of passengers departed on the ——— day of ———, 186–, from the customs district of ———, State of ———, on board the ———, of ——— tons burden, whereof ——— ——— is master, bound for ———.

CLASS 1.—Cabin passengers:

Children
Total
CLASS 2.—Passengers other than cabin:

I hereby swear (or affirm) that the above statement is true: so help me God.

——— ——— Master.

It will be observed that a section has been added to provide more effectually for the outward emigration returns.

The passage of this act will I think have the effect of considerably increasing the apparent exports from the United States.

III. Cases have occurred where inferior cattle and other live animals have been exported from the United States, fattened in Canada, and after having thus gained in value, have been imported at the values sworn to upon clearance. To correct this practice the Secretary of the Treasury, under date of December 7, 1867, issued a circular of instructions to collectors of customs requiring them to assess and collect duty upon such increase in the value of such cattle as may appear to have accrued since their exportation. Compliance with this regulation will necessarily involve such an adjustment of the declared values as will render the future returns made to this Bureau of animals exported and imported more correct. It is not uncommon, also, for horses and other "fancy" stock to be exported at an unduly high valuation in order to influence their market price in Cuba and other foreign countries wither they are sometimes exported.

Cases of the kind first mentioned do not appear for treatment to fall within the province of this Bureau; their importance from the taxation point of view being so much superior to that from the statistical. Nor indeed do cases of the latter kind; their importance being relatively too small to render them worthy of legislative attention.

IV. Our laws provide that foreign tin plates may be imported, and after being made into boxes and other wares, exported, and the duties paid upon them drawn back. This is likewise the case with foreign sugar when refined, foreign hemp when made into cordage, and indeed many other articles. Until lately it has been the uniform practice to report this class of commodities in the outward manifests as of foreign origin, and consequently none of it found its way into the accounts of domestic exports.

Commodities of an entirely domestic origin were often classed upon exportation as foreign, and vice versa; and in this way, also, great discrepancies resulted in the commerce and navigation accounts. As it was found that in common with many other errors, particularly that of describing several kinds of exports under the convenient but embarrassing head of "merchandise," these errors were due to the lack of a more explicit form of outward manifest, the Director submitted for your approval an improved form, which was adopted on the 12th of September last and communicated by the department to the collectors of customs. Reports from the latter since received indicate that this reform has worked satisfactorily, and that the clerks in charge of the export statistics are now relieved from a considerable portion of that guess-work which had almost become a necessity under the previous state of affairs.

The form adopted was as follows:

1867–'8.—NEW FORM—OUTWARD FOREIGN MANIFEST—WHOLE OF CARGO.

Report and manifest of the cargo laden at the port of ———, on board the ———, whereof ——— ———, is master, (or conductor,) bound for ———, 18—.

Marks.	Numbers.	Packages and contents.	Quantities.—Pounds, gallons, &c.	No. 1. Value of domestic merchandise.	No. 2. Value of foreign merchandise, free.	No. 3. Value of foreign merchandise from bonded warehouse.	No. 4. Value of foreign merchandise not from bonded warehouse which has paid duties.	No. 5. Value of foreign merchandise on the passage (in transitu) from one foreign country to another.	To be landed at—

INSTRUCTIONS.

This manifest must correspond in every particular with the special or part manifests.

Column number one should embrace all domestic merchandise, whether exported "in bond" under the internal revenue act or otherwise; also to include all manufactures from foreign products, such as cordage from foreign hemp, sugar refined from foreign sugar, coffee and spices having been ground or adulterated, &c., &c.

Column number two should embrace all foreign merchandise "free" or "not dutiable."

Column number three should embrace all foreign merchandise exported from "bonded warehouses," duties remaining unpaid, or which having been paid, are returnable as drawback.

Column number four should embrace all foreign merchandise, on which the duties have been paid, which has left the custody of the officers of the customs: provided the condition of the merchandise has not been changed; if remanufactured or adulterated, it becomes a domestic export and must be classified as such under column one.

Column number five should embrace all foreign merchandise "in transit," or entered for immediate exportation and so declared upon the custom-house entry.

The above requirements will be exacted at the clearance desks.

MASTER'S OR CONDUCTOR'S OATH ON CLEARING OUTWARD.

District and port of ———:

I, ————, master or conductor of the ———, bound from the port of ——— to ———, do solemnly, sincerely, and truly ——— that the manifest of the cargo on board the said ———, now delivered by me to the collector of this district, and subscribed with my name, contains, according to the best of my knowledge and belief, a full, just, and true account of all the goods, wares, and merchandise now actually laden on board the said vessel or vehicle, and of the value thereof; and if any other goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be laden or put on board the said ——— previous to its departure from this port, I will immediately report the same to the collector. I do also ——— that I verily believe the duties on all foreign merchandise therein specified have been paid or secured according to law, and that no part thereof is intended to be relanded within the United States; and that, if by distress, or other unavoidable accident, it shall become necessary to reland the same, I will forthwith make a just and true report thereof to the collector of the customs of the district wherein such distress or accident may happen. And said cargo is truly intended to be landed in the port of ———: so help me God.

——— to before me this ——— day of ———, 18 .

V. Since 1861–'62, the amount of revenue necessary for the support of the government has become so great that the cost of shipbuilding has, mainly through the agency of taxation, considerably exceeded the limit at which American bottoms are saleable in foreign markets. Hence, since the influence of this increased taxation has fully affected the cost of shipbuilding, our sales of vessels to foreigners have gradually declined in amount, although this traffic once formed a prominent feature of our commerce, and particularly between 1854 and 1861, inclusive, a period during which, without any other pressure to sell than that incidental to all profitable commerce, we disposed of vessels with an aggregate burden of 321,962 tons, equal in value to some $13,000,000 specie.

This statement must be taken with considerable allowance for error, arising variously from—1st. Defective accounts in past years; 2d. A rough rate of valuation; and 3d. The change of admeasurement under the law of May 6, 1864. The tonnage sold may, nevertheless, serve for an approximate estimate of the relative importance of this business, and the total estimated value shows how large a deficit has hitherto occurred in our export account by the omission, through the agency of defective blanks, of a single important item.

While the depredations of rebel privateers during the war are believed to have mainly promoted the unusually large transfer of American vessels to foreign flags which occurred during the period 1862–'65, it is believed that the influence of taxation has mainly operated to cause the unusually small sales of our vessels which is observable since. This is naturally a ship-building country. It has extended coasts, a bountiful supply of timber, and a population skilled in the production of fast-sailing and sea-worthy craft; and, notwithstanding the growing disposition to build vessels of iron, and consequently to build them where the price of iron has ruled lower than in the United States, it is not unreasonable to suppose that the business of building vessels and selling them to foreigners

* OFFICE OF THE WESTERVELT SHIP-YARD,
Green Point, Long Island, February 4, 1868.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 31st ultimo, requesting me to communicate to the Bureau of Statistics my information in my possession upon which an estimate can be based of the average value per ton of all the merchant vessels of the United States in 1828, or any year thereabout, or any year or years since.

The cost of first-class merchant ships built in this city, say, from the year 1828 to 1855, would average about $65 per ton: consequently, a ship of 1,000 tons would cost $65,000, when new and ready for sea. But as you want to get at the value of the whole of the mercantile marine, I think it is fair to assume that the average of the whole would show that they were six years old, and consequently the value of the whole should be estimated from that view of the case.

I have found the depreciation of ship property to be about six per cent. per annum; and supposing a good vessel to depreciate at that rate, it would follow that a ship of 1,000 tons, and costing, when new, $65,000, would, at the end of six years, have depreciated $23,400, and leaving her value $41,600, or $41 6-10 per ton.

I suppose, however, that ships built in New England and elsewhere in the United States cost something less, and I would therefore put the value of the whole mercantile fleet, during the years above mentioned, at $40 per ton.

Yours, respectfully,

JACOB A. WESTERVELT.

Hon. ALEXANDER DELMAR, Director of Bureau of Statistics.

will at some future day be resumed with, at least, some portion of the vigor that once characterized it.*

Whatever the causes that have depressed this branch of our industry, it was deemed desirable to trace its fluctuations from time to time somewhat more correctly than could be done by rough calculations based upon the aggregate tonnage reported sold, and a supposed value per ton. Accordingly, abstracts of the actual sales of vessels to foreigners, as officially reported by the custom-houses, have been provided for in the regular monthly and quarterly forms used by the Bureau, and these transactions are now reported regularly and with precision. The sale of an American-built ship to foreigners is quite as much an export as the sale of an equal value of any other commodity; yet, though under similar circumstances, such sales were commonly included among the statistics of exports published by other governments, they have hitherto not been counted among the exports of this country.

The importance of this item has already been alluded to. Since 1828, according to the table given above, our sales of vessels to foreigners have amounted, in value, to no less a sum than fifty-five and a half million dollars.

For the reasons adduced, and for others not necessary to allude to in this Report, proper allowance should be made for defects and omissions in the statistics of domestic exports as hitherto rendered to, and published by this department—defects and omissions which, even yet, have not been wholly remedied, though it is believed that all has been done that was possible without additional legislation.

A comparison of the past year's Exports with those of other years, and an examination of its details by countries and articles, needs now no further preface.

The following table exhibits the total value of the Domestic Exports of the United States in each year since 1790:

* See report of the Director of the Bureau of Statistics on Ship-building, 1867. It may not, perhaps, be irrelevant in this place to call attention to the foot-note on the first page of the report referred to, and which ran thus:

"It might be thought that the Statement of Vessels Built during the year, which is derived from the returns of the customs collectors, to whom application is made for register or enrolment, and which appears in the Annual Report of Commerce and Navigation, furnishes a sufficient indication of the progress of this industry. But this is far from being the fact. A vessel finished in the fiscal year 1866, for instance, may have been commenced in 1863, 1864, or 1865, and thus a decadence of the interest commencing in any of these years may not be observable, from the annual statistics of vessels taking out registers, until several years afterwards."

Into the error thus cautiously guarded against, it has been the misfortune of an ingenious public writer to fall. In the face of numerous and well-attested facts to the contrary—facts, too, the truth of which was vouched for by the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report for 1866—these figures were made the basis of lengthy articles, which proved that ship-building was never more active and prosperous in the United States than at a time when the ship-yards along the entire coasts of New England were, in point of fact, as silent as cemeteries, and the laying down of a new keel an event of an unusual and a remarkable nature.

* See note to Table XX.

From this table it will be observed that, with more or less fluctuation, our domestic exports rose from 19 millions in 1790 to 373 millions, or nearly twenty times as much, in 1860. Our population rose from four millions in 1790 to thirty-one millions, or eight times as much, in 1860.

The increase of our domestic exports has therefore been $2\frac{1}{2}$ times as great as the increase of our population. This would seem to indicate the ratio of progress which we have made in our producing power as a population since the establishment of the government. Each man, it would seem, is now capable of producing $2\frac{1}{2}$ times as much as he was then. But this deduction is open to serious objections, foremost among which is the fact that exports do not necessarily bear a precisely constant relation to production, (this will be illustrated in another place,) and the fact that prices have increased during the present century, and particularly since the opening of the California mines. As the comparative exports in the above table are aggregated by their prices in gold each year, their true relative proportions by quantities are not shown.

It will perhaps be interesting, however, as a means of rough comparison, to exhibit in a similar manner the relation that exists between the growth of British exports, and population. In 1801 the declared value of the exports of British and Irish produce and manufactures was, at $5 to the £ sterling. 199 millions of dollars; in 1865 it was 829 millions, or $4\frac{1}{8}$ times as much. In 1801 the population of Great Britain and Ireland was about 15 millions; in 1865 it was about 30 millions, or twice as much. The exports have, therefore, increased $2\frac{1}{12}$ times as much as the population, which is nearly the same ratio as in our own case; indeed, allowing for the difference in the periods, (due to the incompleteness of statistical data relative to population and commerce previous to the beginning of the present century,) the results, in both instances, may be regarded as substantially the same. If the same rate of progress in both respects continued to the year 1900, it would make our population 142 millions, and the value of our annual domestic exports over 3,000 million dollars. But such conclusions, although derived, as in this case, from a comparison of results in point of time seventy years apart, and though apparently more reliable than those drawn, as is commonly the case, from a comparison of decennial results, are not to be depended upon; and, for many reasons, are probably not even approximately true.

Railways have obviously had so much to do with the increase of commerce in economizing time, cheapening transportation, and bringing remote lands within easy reach of the markets in populous districts, that a comparison between our exports and the extension of our railway system may be not without interest.

* The mileage of railways from 1828 to 1867 is taken from Fisher's Statistics. The other data are official.
† The year for the railway mileage is the calendar year; for the exports it is the fiscal year.
‡ Reduced to specie value.

From the above table it is extremely hazardous to deduce any rule for the future. The railway mileage of this country and the value of its annual domestic exports have not run in parallel lines. The nearest approach to it has been during the past decade; though this is regarded as rather narrow data upon which to build a wide generalization. Accepting it as a guide, however, our total railway mileage during the coming decade will average $\frac{1}{9000}$th part of our average annual domestic exports, specie value.

The relation of exports to production now demands attention. Our domestic exports have always consisted, and do still consist, mainly of unmanufactured products and articles of food. They should, therefore, bear a rude uniformity of relation to our annual product of raw materials and food, so that, given the amount of one, the extent of the other may be deduced. This uniformity of relation, however, is subject to many disturbances. A comparison by values instead of quantities is a source of disturbance. The distortion temporarily

(for one, two, or five years) occasioned from time to time by tax and other legislation, is another. The difficulty of correctly valuing products at their original place of production is a third. The fact that the exports are valued after, while the products are valued before, interior commerce has added to their original prices, is a fourth—and so on. Nevertheless the aggregates are so large that these minor disturbances may not sensibly alter their relative proportions. Leaving them, therefore, entirely out of view, it appears that our exports have, for a long period back, constituted from one-fifth to one-sixth of our total raw product. The following table contains a recapitulation of the interesting data from which this rule is deduced:

 The total domestic exports during the year 1860–'61 are not known. The manuscript records give 228.7 millions, but the accounts of the exports from most of the southern ports, except for a single quarter, are missing. The true exports have been estimated at 389.7 millions, but this is mere conjecture. Consult Finance Report, 1867, pp. 247 and 248, and Finance Report, 1863, pp. 271, 273, and 278. Measures have been taken to obtain the missing accounts. Thus far, the following official returns have been received at the Bureau of Statistics: During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1861, from New Orleans, $116,177,551; Savannah, $13,692,752; Charleston, $7,261,180; Mobile, $16,312,148; total, $153,443,631. These bring the official returns, so far, up to $382,000,000 and over.

NOTE.—For the year 1840 the values are those stated by Professor Tucker. For 1850, with the exception of "live stock," the values are those given on page 176 of De Bow's Compendium of the Seventh Census. For 1860, with the exception of "live stock," the values are those given by Mr. Delmar, (International Almanac, 1866, page 60.) For 1866 the quantities and values of the crops of grain, hops, potatoes, hay, tobacco, butter, and cheese are those given in the annual and monthly reports of the Department of Agriculture; of wool, that given in the report of the Special Commissioner of the revenue; of cotton, the quantity (2,214,476 bales of 400 pounds each) is that given in Neill Brothers' Cotton Circular, October 15, 1867; of cane sugar and molasses the quantities as reported in the New Orleans Price Current, March 9, 1867.

Persons having more precise information concerning special crops than is furnished herein will confer a favor by addressing the Director of the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Dep't.

The course of our export trade to the various countries of the world is shown by the following table:

This table shows some interesting results. Compared with 1860 our domestic exports for 1867 have fallen off nearly 39 millions of dollars, or over 10 per cent. During the same period the domestic exports of the United Kingdom have increased 237 millions of dollars, or 30 per cent., and those of France (proper) 226.2 millions, or 43 per cent. Whatever have been the causes that have enabled Great Britain and France to outstrip us in their foreign commerce, it would seem that now no means should be neglected that will tend to at least restore our lost position. France has now double the amount of exports that we have, the United Kingdom three times the amount, and when it is remembered, not alone in its commercial, but in its social and equalizing aspect, what an important agent international commerce has become in the diffusion of intelligence and capital, and in the consequent promotion of peace and happiness, the suggestion derives new force, and demands that it be regarded with more than passing attention.

Descending to details, our exports to the United Kingdom since 1860 have fallen off 13 millions of dollars, or 6½ per cent.; to France, 24.8 millions, or 42 per cent.; and to British North America, 3 millions, or 16⅛ per cent. The percentage of decrease of exports to the United Kingdom is therefore much less, while that of the exports to France and British North America is considerably greater than the percentage of the entire decrease. Our exports to France have fallen off four times as much in proportion as those to all countries combined; and to British North America nearly twice as much. On the contrary, our exports to the North German Union, (Prussia, the Hanse Towns, &c.,) and particularly to Hamburg, have increased; the increase, taking the Union collectively, being 6.2 millions, or nearly 42 per cent. A like increase is also to be observed in our small export trade to Belgium; but with these exceptions, our exports to the west of Europe show a marked decline.

It is interesting to examine the direction, as to products, of this important falling off in our foreign trade. The following comparative table will serve to throw some light upon it:

TABLE XXIII.

Exports of domestic staple products that have fallen off as compared with 1860.—(Values in specie, expressed in million dollars and tenths.)

Southern products.	1860.		1867.		Decrease.
Cotton	191.8		143.9		47.9
Tobacco	15.9		14.0		1.9
Rice	2.6		.1		2.5

Live animals	1.8		.5		1.3
		66.0		60.1		5.9
Total		280.2		220.3		59.9

The leading southern staples thus show a falling off of 54 millions, and the leading northern staples a falling off of 5.9 millions, making, together, a decrease of 59.9 million dollars, gold value.

On the other hand, this is partly compensated by the following exhibit of staples, which show an increase:

TABLE XXIV.

Exports of domestic staple products that have increased, as compared with 1860.—(Values in specie, expressed in million dollars and tenths.)

Products, (mainly northern.)	1860.	1867.	Increase.

Petroleum and coal oils	None.	17.2	17.2
Tallow	1.6	2.0	.4
Total	33.0	60.4	27.4

These staples together exhibit an increase of 27.4 millions. They are mostly northern products, a portion of the breadstuffs being of southern origin. A portion of the lumber is also of southern production. Taking all our staple products together, they exhibit a falling off of 32.5 million dollars, or about nine per cent. For the remainder of the decrease we must look at our exports of domestic manufactures.

Until the creation of the Bureau of Statistics the custom-house statistical tables were compiled from quarterly reports and published annually, with no division of the year into shorter periods. These accounts are now compiled from monthly reports and published monthly. A comparison of our export trade by months is, therefore, practicable now for the first time:

TABLE XXVII.

* Corrected to February, 1868.

From the above it appears that August, September, and October are the lightest exporting months. This is mainly due to the fact that cotton, our principal staple of export, is not ready for shipment until November. By the following July the shipments of the year's crop of cotton cease. February, March, and April, for this reason, are the heaviest exporting months. From January to June, 1867, our exports amounted in value to more than they ever did within any previous period of six months, i. e., to $265,496,098 mixed values, or, reduced to specie value, to $204,820,229.

The proportion of our foreign trade carried in American vessels during the year has been alluded to in a previous page of this report, (page XXI.)

With regard to the proportion of its leading exports furnished by the United States to Great Britain, the principal country with which it trades, the following table establishes what, in view of the prevailing popular belief on the subject, is rather a remarkable result:

It will be noticed that, of 29,941,558 quintals of wheat and wheat flour imported into Great Britain during the twelve months ended June 30, 1867, but 1,620,405 quintals, or $5\frac{4}{10}$ per cent, was furnished by the United States, or little more than the quantity furnished by Turkey; while Russia furnished $35\frac{1}{10}$ per cent., the North German Union $29\frac{7}{10}$ per cent., and France $10\frac{2}{10}$ per cent., the remainder being distributed among minor countries. The proportion by value is much the same. Of £20,420,468 worth of wheat and wheat flour, the United States furnished but £1,177,752 worth, or $5\frac{8}{10}$ per cent. These results are food for serious reflection. Surely, something appears to be wrong in a state of affairs in which we find ourselves cut off from our principal foreign market for the sale of these important commodities.

The fact that our wheat crop of 1866–'67 (shipped during the fiscal year 1867) was not materially larger than our wheat crop of 1859–'60, (shipped during the fiscal year 1860,) while our population was several million greater, has doubtless had much to do with it.

The following table exhibits the wheat crop and population of the United States in 1859–'60 and 1866–'67, respectively:

It may be supposed, from our increased exports of Indian corn, that that staple has partially supplanted cotton in the southern States; but the following table shows that the crop of Indian corn in the southern States, in 1866, instead of being greater, was less than that in 1859.

IMPORTS OF THE UNITED STATES.*

It has already been noticed that the monthly reports of the Bureau have mainly been devoted to minute and late details of our foreign commerce, and it has been intimated that it would have been preferable to have merely taken these accounts as they were returned by the collectors of customs and compiled in the Department, and after grouping their results by periods of time, by countries, by customs districts, or by articles, and showing the relation these results bore to other matters, to have paid more attention to compiling and comparing the statistics of our internal trade, our agriculture, manufactures, and mineral products, our river and lake trade, our railways, and our canals.

It will be recollected, however, that there were certain obstacles opposed to this course: first, the disreputable condition into which our foreign commerce and navigation accounts had fallen; second, the almost total absence of any late official information relative to our domestic affairs. There was no data of any great value later than 1860, and therefore there was nothing to compile; while comparisons and deductions, drawn from data which the war had rendered valueless for practical purposes, would have served no useful end. This state of things made it necessary, first, for the Director to become familiar with the laws relative to our foreign commerce and navigation, and the actual practice in the Department and the custom-houses, meanwhile dividing his clerical force into two parts—one to aid him in reforming our international statistics, and the other to obtain and compile reliable data relative to our domestic industries. By the time the labors of the latter were ready for revision and preparation he hoped to have thoroughly reformed the former, and thus to have presented them both, completed and in harmony, to the Department and to Congress.

In pursuance of this plan a point has now been reached when the current foreign trade statistics are nearly placed upon a correct footing. Another year will doubtless see them as correct as they can be made under the laws and regulations at present prevailing. How much more correct this will be than they have ever been since 1850 will be seen as this Report proceeds. By that time, too, the clerks engaged upon the statistics of our domestic industries will have so far completed their labors of compilation as to be ready to submit them for revision and preparation. It is then proposed to report the results of both, showing their absolute and relative growth, in gross and detail, and their dependence or influence upon the other matters of national concern with which they are related.

* Report completed in May, 1868, and bound with this volume after it was published.

It is scarcely worth while to refer to the obstacles that have stood in the way of accomplishing this task—the multiplicity of our foreign trade laws and regulations, the unwillingness of some who had become acquainted with parts of the practice that had grown up with these accounts to communicate it, and the impatience and intolerance of persons unfamiliar with the operation of administrative departments, who could not understand why a set of accounts—probably the largest in the world—that for many years had fallen into neglect and disrepute, were not rectified at once: these and many other matters of minor interest are left to be gathered from a comparison of the accounts as they stand to-day, and as they stood when the Director entered upon the duties of his office.

The public disrepute that attached to the accounts has been mentioned. They had been discredited and assailed by private individuals and the press, and even officers of the government had not hesitated to impugn their correctness, in their official reports, and stigmatize them as worthless. To ascertain definitely to what extent these charges were well founded was one of the necessities of my office; without it reform was impossible.

In two words, then, their condition was even worse—much worse—than was publicly supposed, and the law that established this Bureau and that led to an investigation of these accounts will, it is confidently claimed, be admitted as one of the most successful measures of the 39th Congress, and of your administration of the Treasury Department, during which, mainly through the untiring efforts of Mr. Commissioner Wells, it was passed.

For the sake of illustration, take the import account for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1867, which, though compiled nominally under the Director's supervision, was commenced before the creation of his office upon blank forms prepared and furnished by the Register of the Treasury, and was returned and compiled under the old system.

THE OLD SYSTEM.

ERRONEOUS TITLE.

In the first place, (see page 3, part II,) the title of the account as previously printed, viz., General statement of imports from foreign countries, was erroneous and misleading. It was changed in the "general" table while the volume of 1867 was passing through the press, to General statement of entries of imports from foreign countries; but from 1821 to 1866, the former title—a title which, though correct in 1821, had ceased to be correct from the date of the establishment of the warehouse system of 1846—had been perpetuated from year to year without alteration.

The "import" tables published by other countries having a custom-house system are generally so arranged that a distinction is shown between the commodities imported, i. e., brought or landed from foreign countries to or at the home country during a given period of time, and those which passed the custom-house line into the home country during the same period of time. But this was not the case with our "import" account, which was framed to show only the commodities that were landed from foreign countries during a given period of time, and did not show the commodities that during the same period of time entered into the country for home consumption, upon paying duties, if dutiable: which might be more or less, in a year, to a very considerable extent. It is, however, the amount of the latter—the commodities entered into the home country for home consumption—that is properly to be contrasted with the exports during a given period of time; and not that of the entries or commodities landed, which may always and properly embrace commodities that are never destined to enter into the consumption of the country in any way. Some are commodities that take the chance of a market here, but failing to be sold in warehouse, may eventually be forwarded to other countries, or even returned to their own; some are commodities that will not keep well in warm climates, and are temporarily warehoused at our northern ports until disposed of to West Indian and South American buyers; and some are destined for immediate exportation, and properly belong to the intransit and transhipment trade, only the owners have neglected on entry to make explicit declaration that they are not entered to be imported into this country for home consumption—a mere technical matter that only affects their mode of entry at the custom-houses and their treatment in the accounts.

To recapitulate: The title "import" account, since the date of the establishment of the warehouse system of 1846, was wrong. The account was merely an account of custom-house entries or a landing account of commodities from foreign countries; and even had it been compiled correctly, no definite indication of the actual importations for home consumption during a given period of time could possibly have been gathered from it after the year 1846.

One of the results of retaining this erroneous title was that some of the collectors returned the import entries, while others reported the real imports (the imports for home consumption) upon their returns, and all were accepted at the Department and compiled in the same account. (See sub-heading, "Various forms of complex errors, &c.") The collector of Detroit, one of the most intelligent and experienced officers of the customs I had had the happiness to meet, when his attention was called to certain discrepancies that had been observed between parts of his import entries' and warehouse returns, informed me, under date of January 17, 1868, that all the previous returns had been made upon the supposition that the so-called "import" return exhibited the imports for home consumption.

PRACTICE OF INCLUDING THE PRODUCTS OF THE AMERICAN FISHERIES AMONG THE IMPORT ENTRIES.

On page 10 will be noticed an account of commodities valued at $6,100,367, from the American fisheries, to wit: Spermaceti, whale, and other fish oil, 3,579,443 gallons, value $4,538,605, and "other products of fisheries," 9,588,270 pounds, value $1,561,761. Without inquiring into the advantage of asking to be given, and giving in "pounds," the aggregate quantity of a number of articles embraced together in one class with no explanation of details, the inclusion of this class of entries in this account is clearly wrong. In no sense are the products of the American fisheries foreign commodities, nor are they from foreign countries, which latter characteristic is, in the law of 1820, and the Treasury Regulations of 1857, article 814, made the condition of the admission of articles into the import accounts.

They consist of the catch of whaling vessels and of such fishing smacks as obtain their catch in the waters beyond the limits of our own shores. But as all these vessels are American, and are built, equipped, and manned at our own ports, and all the capital and labor invested and employed in them is American, and as their product is not procured by barter or from foreign countries, but directly from the elements, so that, too, is American; and although, for reasons connected with the efficient administration of our revenue service, it is made necessary for them to "enter" at the custom-houses on arrival, their product is held to be not thereby denationalized.

In article 838 of the Treasury Regulations of 1857, the products of the American fisheries are inserted indeed in the list of articles that the import entries account is required to include. This explains the manner in which these entries found their way into the import entries' account; but while it extenuates the inconsistence of the custom-houses, it only localizes that of the Department. The inclusion of these products in the list of articles to be returned in the import entries' account is clearly at variance with the law of 1820, which only required the "import" accounts to show the goods, wares, and merchandise "imported into the United State from foreign countries." Some of these products of the American fisheries, instead of being brought directly to our ports from the fishing grounds, are landed on the west coast of the Isthmus of Panama, and thence transported across the isthmus and shipped to our eastern seaports, and some are transhipped by other routes; but this does not alter the case, and the Regulations expressly place this trade upon the same footing as the other. (See Treasury Regulations, 1857, article 273.)

Since this erroneous practice came under observation the product of the American fisheries has been omitted from the import entries' account, and furnished in a separate table giving details, entitled Form 30–1–2, statement of the products of American fisheries received into the United States. (For quarterly accounts of these receipts from the fisheries during the current fiscal year, see Monthly Report No. 11, p. 9, No. 15, p. 15, and No. 18, p. —.) The "other products," formerly given in pounds, proved, when the reform mentioned was adopted, to consist of head-matter, whalebone, ambergris, cured codfish, mackerel, herring, and other fish, oysters, other shell fish, fresh fish, sponge, shell, and bone, other than whalebone, teeth, skins, and manure, and other substances that are variously measured by gallons, pounds, quintals, bushels, number, tons, &c. How they were previously reduced to one uniform measure of pounds does not appear.

The extent to which the practice of this error has annually swollen the import entries account may be gathered from the following statement:

PRACTICE OF INCLUDING AMERICAN GUANO AMONG THE IMPORT ENTRIES.

On page 145 appears an account of 76,770 tons of guano, value $1,670,493. The error involved in the inclusion of these sums, in the import entries' account, is not so obvious as the one last mentioned, until it is known that a large portion of this guano was received from American islands, bonded under the act of August 18, 1856. Such guano is an American product, and is not from foreign countries, and therefore belongs to the same category as the products of our fisheries. Moreover, the act of Congress expressly provides that "the introduction of guano from such islands, rocks, or keys shall be regulated as in the coasting trade between different parts of the United States, and the same laws shall govern the vessels concerned therein."

Such being the case, the inclusion of these entries in the import entries' account was clearly erroneous, and the same course was pursued in this case as in the other. Since July 1, 1867, a separate and more definite return has been required of such entries—for example, showing what particular islands the guano was brought from—and they have been omitted from the import entries' account. (For quarterly returns during the current fiscal year see Monthly Reports No. 11, p. 12; No. 15, p. 15, and No. 18, p. —.)

The extent to which the practice of this error has annually swollen the import entries' account has not been ascertained, and is difficult to estimate with accuracy. The following tables, XXXV, of the entries of all guano since 1850, and XXXVI, the entries of American guano during the current year, (the earliest data,) may lead to an approximation.

PRACTICE OF INCLUDING CERTAIN PRODUCTS OF THE STATE OF MAINE AMONG THE IMPORT ENTRIES.

On page 4 will be observed an account of "articles the product of the United States brought back,"* value $2,751,051; and on page 14 one of "all other articles," free of duty, value $667,593. Partly under one of these heads and partly under another is concealed a number of entries of lumber and agricultural produce, shipped from certain parts of the State of Maine, via New Brunswick, to certain seaports of the United States. This lumber and these agricultural products were the produce of the State of Maine, upon the St. John and the St. Croix rivers and their tributaries, "unmanufactured in whole or in part," owned by American citizens, the lumber having been sawed in the province of New Brunswick by American citizens. The route through New Brunswick is one through a foreign country; but there is an obvious impropriety in allowing this fact to denationalize such products and cause them to be classed with commodities from foreign countries. Moreover, the treaty with Great Britain, known as the Ashburton treaty, ratified in Washington November 10, 1842, and the acts of Congress approved March 16, 1866, and June 1, 1866, as well as the Regulations of the Treasury Department of July 6, 1866,† distinctly recognize these products as of domestic origin, and make provision for them as such. Accordingly since July 1, 1867, they have been omitted from the import entries' account, and a separate and more definite form of return has been adopted, showing this trade at greater length. (For quarterly returns during the current fiscal year see Monthly Report No. 11, p. 12; No. 15, p. 15, and No. 18, p. —.)

The extent to which the practice of this error has annually swollen the import entries' account can only be estimated from the statistics of the current year, this being the only departmental data attainable.‡

*The heading "articles the product of the United States brought back," is intended only to include such articles as have previously been cleared at a port or district of the United States. (See Treas. Reg. 1857, chap. 2, sec. 8.) Under such conditions they would have found their way into previous export accounts, and it would then be quite proper, upon their return to this country, to include them in the import entries' account. The two accounts, so far as these articles went, would then balance. Articles, the product of the United States, which, when they originally left this country, were not duly cleared at a custom-house, are subject to duty upon being brought back. In the statistical accounts such articles have hitherto, doubtless, been classed among the unenumerated articles subject to duty. This practice is wrong. They should not be included in either the import entries' or imports for home consumption accounts unless their amount is separately shown, and a note made of the American port from which they were originally exported, the foreign country to which they were exported, and the time at which the export occurred. It has not been ascertained to what extent this erroneous practice has gone.

†And later still the Regulations of the Treasury of May 25, 1868; see also President's Message, August 11, 1842.

‡With the exception that Mr. Warner, the United States consul at St. John's, New Brunswick, roported to this Bureau, under date of June 26, 1867, that the shipments of lumber to the United States, under the act of June 1, 1866, were from July 1, 1866, to June 1, 1867, (eleven months,) $153,457, as follows: To Calais, Maine, $145,128; to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, $985, and to New York, $7,344. PRACTICE OF INCLUDING THE IN-TRANSITU AND TRANSHIPMENT ENTRIES IN THE IMPORT ENTRIES' ACCOUNT.

A discrepancy in the statistical accounts of the collector of the leading district of ——— brought to light the fact that he had been in the habit of including in his returns of "imports" to the Department all the in-transitu and transhipment entries made at his port. A general inquiry was therefore directed to be made on this point, and the result showed that the collectors of ———, and ———, and others, had fallen into the same practice.

The in-transit trade consists of commodities intended merely for transit through the United States; for instance, goods entering the United States from British North America at Niagara Falls, New York, or at Island Pond, Vermont, and passing out at New York or Portland, destined for Europe or the West Indies or elsewhere. The transit trade through this country is quite considerable. A large transit trade flows in the opposite direction, from foreign countries through New York, Portland, or some other seaport, and thence through the United States over the border by way of Island Pond, by the Grand Trunk railway, or Suspension Bridge by the New York Central and Great Western railway of Canada. A somewhat devious transit trade finds its way through Detroit and Port Huron. Commodities from the eastward, destined for that portion of Canada lying east of the river St. Clair, and south of Lake Huron, are entered at Detroit, in-transit, shipped thence to Port Huron, where they are entered again for Canada and landed at Port Sarnia on the Canadian side of St. Clair river. This route, though longer in distance, is shorter in time, there being a line of railway from Detroit to Port Huron that connects with the entire railway system of this country and Canada.

There is a transit trade to and from Mexico, and another stream of transit trade flows through the United States to and from the Red River settlement and Hudson's Bay territory. The former finds its channel across the Rio Grande, and the latter through the town of Pembina, in Minnesota. Finally, a very important and growing transit trade has sprung up between Europe and Asia by way of New York, the Isthmus of Panama, and San Francisco. This trade is evidently but the precursor of that mighty stream of commerce that is only awaiting the completion of the Pacific railway to develop its real magnitude. The value of the present in-transit trade of the United States, taking the returns of 1866 and 1867 as a basis of estimate, (the only reliable data attainable,) is about $17,000,000 annually.

1867	$1,220,062	$2,566,795	$10,859,992	$2,564,092	$17,210,941
1868	1,920,373	4,121,001	*8,946,913	Returns not in.	14,988,287

*Returns for this quarter from Passamaquoddy, Maine, and San Francisco, California, not yet received.

From this account it appears that this trade is mainly conducted in winter time. Reference to the countries to and from which the trade passes furnishes a ready explanation of this peculiarity. It arises from the fact that Canada has no seaports open in winter, and that during the period when navigation is closed she is forced to supply herself with European and other foreign commodities received through our seaports and forwarded thence in transit across our territory to her borders. The principal articles from Canada appear to be breadstuffs and other products of agriculture and lumbering; and the principal articles to Canada wearing apparel, such as dry goods, hats and bonnets, and boots and shoes, and hardware, groceries, and liquors. A full account for the year ended June 30, 1867, will be found in Monthly Report No. 12, p. 14. This is the earliest reliable data to be obtained; no requirement to compile the particulars of the in-transit trade having been made until the law was enacted authorizing the establishment of this Bureau, July 28, 1866.* The principal seaports in our territory through which this trade flows are Portland and New York, the former having forwarded $13,464,714, and the latter $3,342,554; total, $16,807,268 out of the $17,210,941 shown in the table.

Forming a part of the in-transit trade is the transhipment trade. For example, goods coming from the West Indies, and destined for Europe, are often transhipped from one vessel to another in one of our ports. As another instance of the deviousness of particular streams of commerce, it may be here stated that palm oil from Africa is sometimes received at Boston by one vessel and there transhipped, for conveyance to Europe in another vessel.

The Regulations of the Treasury Department (articles 488 and 499) expressly direct that merchandise in transit "is not to be considered an importation into the United States within the meaning and intent of the law," and it should therefore not be included in our account of imports and exports. It simply includes two classes of commodities, neither of which can enter into the consumption of the country. Commodities in transit pass through this country, never into it, in sealed vessels from one foreign country to another. Commodities transhipped are simply unladen from a vessel arrived from a foreign country, and placed on board another vessel bound to a foreign country, usually a different foreign country.

It may be as well to remark in this place, however, that in the laws and regulations the term in-transit (trade) has not that special meaning which has been given to it here and in the instructions issued from this office. Here it means to embrace the merchandise that passes through this country from one foreign country to another, and which at the time it was entered at a customs district in this country was explicitly stated to be intended to leave the country immediately. In the laws and regulations, however, the term in-transit is used to embrace not only this class of merchandise but all merchandise in transportation under customs bonds; for example, merchandise transported from warehouse in Boston to warehouse in New York, merchandise transported from Canada via one of our border ports, destined for warehousing and exportation at one of our seaports, &c. The distinction between the two classes of trade, however, is sufficiently marked. Merchandise in transit cannot under any circumstances enter this country for consumption, while such as may under any circumstances enter the country for consumption must be treated as an "import," at the first customs district where the inspection takes place. The term in transit includes the term transshipped, which latter is used to specify that portion of the in-transit trade passing at our ports from one ship to another for the purpose previously mentioned.

To what extent the erroneous practice of including the in-transit and transhipment trade in the import entries account has tended to vitiate the latter is difficult to say.

*"The said Director shall also prepare an annual statement of all merchandise passing in-transit through the United States to foreign countries." Under this enactment a full account of the in-transit trade of the United States for the year ended June 30, 1867, was compiled and published in the Monthly Report for December, 1867, page 14.

PRACTICE OF INCLUDING WAREHOUSE TRANSPORTATION ENTRIES IN THE IMPORT ENTRIES' ACCOUNT.

The warehouse laws provide that commodities in bonded warehouse at one place in the United States may be removed and transported in bond to another place in the United States, and there re-warehoused. In other words, the particular location of the commodities before payment of duties may be changed. For example, during the twelve months ended December 31, 1867, (the first reliable data of the kind extant,) commodities to the value of some $9,000,000 were received into warehouse at certain of the leading customs districts of the United States from warehouses in other customs districts.

These commodities thus transported were, at the time they were originally landed from abroad, included in the returns of import entries made to this Department by the collectors of the customs districts where they were so landed. To report them again among the import entries, at districts where they were subsequently re-warehoused, is to duplicate them, and so to erroneously swell the "import" returns. Yet such was the practice; and it might have been detected at any time by a careful comparison of the different accounts kept by the Department under the old system. It only came to light, however, during the progress of the investigations conducted under the present management. It has been practiced by a large number of customs districts, though precisely to what extent and during what length of time would be troublesome and expensive to ascertain.

The district of ———— is particularly noticeable in this connection; but the notoriously disreputable condition into which the departmental accounts had fallen, and the effect which the knowledge of this fact must have had in producing indifference and negligence among the custom-house clerks designated to compile returns for the Department, should, it is thought, be taken into consideration if the responsibility for the commission of these blunders is sought to be fixed. The extent to which this practice, one of long standing, vitiated the annual import entries' account cannot now be definitely ascertained.

VARIOUS FORMS OF COMPLEX ERRORS IN THE IMPORT ENTRIES' ACCOUNT.

Some of the errors are of such a complex character that to make them intelligible to those not technically acquainted with the accounts compiled in the Department, it becomes necessary, though at the risk of tediousness, to state what each of the principal accounts now kept should contain.

The import entries account should contain:

CLASS A. All the free goods landed in a customs district from a foreign country. [In the account of 1867, these amounted to—the value of entries from American fisheries, $6,100,367, the only amount among those of the several clauses of errors in the free goods which is separately shown, is subtracted from the total import entries of free goods, shown on page 15—$39,103,603. See page 15, and note on page 268;] and

CLASS B. All the dutiable commodities landed or first inspected in a customs district from a foreign country, and which have paid duties and been entered directly for home consumption. [This class cannot be separately shown in the import entries' account of 1867, there having been no division of the import entries as returned in the quarterly accounts, into these classes, previous to July 1, 1867;] and CLASS C. All the dutiable commodities landed or first inspected in a customs district from a foreign country and entered into warehouse, either actually or constructively, and for whatever purpose, provided they may be withdrawn, if the owner chooses, for consumption in the United States.

The imports for home consumption account should contain:

Class A, and class B, and CLASS D. All the commodities withdrawn from warehouse for consumption.

The warehouse account should contain on the debit side:

Class C, and

CLASS E. All the commodities received into warehouse from other districts than the one reporting.

The warehouse account should contain on the credit side:

Class D, and

CLASS F. All the commodities withdrawn from warehouse for transportation in bond to other districts than the one reporting; and CLASS G. All the commodities withdrawn from warehouse for exportation overland to adjacent British provinces; and CLASS H. All the commodities withdrawn from warehouse for exportation to other adjacent foreign territory; and CLASS I. All the commodities withdrawn from warehouse for exportation by sea.

The in-transitu and transhipment account should contain:

CLASS J. All the commodities landed or first inspected in a customs district from a foreign country with the declaration that they are immediately intended to be forwarded under official seal to a (usually another) foreign country across the territory of the United States; and which, therefore, can in no event enter into consumption in the United States; and CLASS K. All the commodities taken out or disembarked from a ship from a foreign country with the declaration that they are intended to be immediately laden on board a (usually another) ship bound to a (usually another) foreign country, and which, therefore, like the foregoing, cannot enter into our home consumption.

The error of including in the import entries account not only classes A, B, and C, but also classes J and K, has already been alluded to under the head of "Practice of including in-transit and transhipment entries in the import entries' account."

The error of including in the import entries' account not only classes A, B, and C, but also class E, has likewise been alluded to. See heading "Practice of including transportation entries in the import entries' account."

But the class of errors now in question arose out of excluding from the import entries' account some one or more of the proper classes A, B, and C, and including some one or more of the improper classes D, E, F, G, H, I, J, and K.

The confusion occasioned by these practices is left to be inferred. To say that they increased the apparent amount of our annual "imports" is no more warranted by the facts known than to say that they diminish it. That they modified it to a very serious extent, the condition of the accounts under the old system testifies very emphatically; but which way these modifications affected the annual totals cannot be ascertained without considerable trouble and expense, while the extent to which they increased or diminished the apparent amount of the annual "imports" of particular articles, cannot be ascertained at all. It is deemed a duty to plainly state the fact of this matter now that it has been definitely ascertained. The Treasury tables of our foreign trade for years prior to July 1, 1867, are wrong from beginning to end; wrong in totals, wrong in details, and at variance, one table with another; so that nothing but a series of compilations based largely upon unofficial data can ever supply the places from which they should be dropped in our public accounts. They not only do not agree among themselves, but they fail to agree with foreign official tables of reputed authenticity.

Many of the manuscript records have disappeared from the files of the Department, and such as remain are filled with inaccuracies, and interpolated and mutilated in a manner calling for the severest censure. Such, in a word, was the condition of the accounts of past years, that the task of reforming the system has involved the necessity of examining and tracing to its origin every detail however minute. Scarcely anything was found correct; though on the surface all looked fair enough. All was error, confusion, pretence, and waste. To occasionally err in the arrangement or detail of so extended a system of accounts would appear excusable; but no extenuation can be perceived for making error and neglect a rule of practice. A review of the records of these important accounts for years back, and the tables published from them, yield but a single undoubted conviction, viz: that the recommendation of the Department and the act of Congress which led to their reform came none too soon.

RETURNS OF ONE TRANSACTION FROM TWO PLACES.

Another wrong practice is that of returning one transaction from two places. That this practice largely prevailed was suspected several months ago, and it was endeavored to so arrange the system of returns as to put an end to it, but time enough has not elapsed to mark the complete success of the measures taken. For example, a car-load of lumber enters Portland by the Grand Trunk railway, from Canada, via Island Pond, (district of Burlington.) This lumber is entered for warehouse on form 104, Treasury Regulations, article 431. This being a direct entry of dutiable goods into warehouse, it falls under class C, (see ante,) and as such should be included both in the import entries' account and in the warehouse account of the same district. The question, however, is, which district—Burlington or Portland? There would be no room for question about this if each collector of the customs was provided with a complete and compact body of the revenue laws and regulations. The laws and regulations up to February, 1857, are digested and compacted in one handy volume, which form the vade mecum of our customs officers; but the subsequent laws and regulations are only to be found on reference to scattered and undigested circulars of the Department, and these frequently change or modify the contents of the former. For example: The first section of act of Congress of 27th June, 1864, 13 Statutes, 197, says: "That all goods from foreign contiguous territory shall be inspected at" (and consequently reported from) "the first port of entry or custom-house in the United States where the same shall arrive;" in this case, Burlington; but the second section allows such goods, if sealed by the collector at the first district (in the present case, Burlington) to proceed to its destination (in the present case, Portland) without inspection.

But in the present case the goods are not sealed. Shall the collector of Burlington stop the lumber, inspect it, compel entry to be made at his district, and return the transaction to the Department among his import entries; or shall he allow it to pass onward to its destination, leaving the whole matter to the collector of Portland? Here is doubt. The treasury circular of 15th October, 1866, removes this doubt, for it provides that lumber, live animals, and other specified commodities may pass on to another customs district for entry without sealing; but this circular, like all others issued since the volume of 1857 was published, is printed on separate sheets of paper, and the modifications they make in the substance of the digest are not always clearly appreciated. A new edition of the regulations is much needed.

OTHER FORMS OF ERROR FROM DEFECTIVE CUSTOM-HOUSE ENTRIES AND ESTIMATES.

One of these forms of error can be briefly explained by the following illustration, taken from the actual practice at a leading customs district:

Entry No. 5,192 exhibited "one case glassware, &c., $189." Upon liquidation this proved to be smoking pipes, $13; decorated china, $23, and fancy boxes, $153. As the report of this entry to this Bureau was made before liquidation, the cause, nature, and extent of the error is perceived and understood at a glance.

Another form of error will be illustrated from the practice of the same district:

Entry No 4,277 exhibited "one case of India-rubber goods and wafers, $168, at 35 per cent."

Entry No. 4,238 exhibited "three cases of paper and penholders, $296, at 35 per cent."

These entries were reported in the returns to this Bureau as follows: manufactures of India-rubber, $168; wafers, nothing; paper, $148, and penholders, $148. In the first one the wafers were omitted altogether, "the India-rubber goods being considered the article of chief value." In the other the combined value of the two articles was equally divided between each, "this rule being generally observed when the entry furnishes no distinctive indications into equal parts."

To expect that the statistical accounts of 20,000 articles, amounting in value to over $400,000,000 a year in specie, and concerning the nature, quantity, and value of each of which exists temptation to misrepresent and deceive, shall be as correct as the accounts of an equal number of articles upon the ledgers of a body of merchants, is to expect impossibility. But there is believed to be much room for improvement upon the practices alluded to. The entries should always be explicit enough to admit of reclassification, and attentive regard should be paid to the object of the accounts compiled from the import entries' returns and the credit reposed in them as guides to public legislation and administration. With these ends in view every needful rule can be observed, and with even less labor than if they are disregarded.

ERRORS FROM DEFECTIVE ENTRIES AND ESTIMATES AT THE CUSTOM-HOUSES.

This practice is still pursued, though it is believed that careful supervision has divested it of much of the very serious importance it possessed up to July 1, 1867. It arises in this manner: Importers, upon making entry of their goods at the custom-houses, are allowed by the entry clerks (contrary to the regulations of the Department, article 832) to omit stating upon their entries the quantities of merchandise subject to ad valorem duties. The omissions are then supplied at the custom-houses, sometimes according to a standing rule of relation between quantities and values, but generally arbitrarily and according to individual fancy. As an example of the former kind, the collector of a leading customs district furnishes the following relations between the quantities and values of certain important classes of merchandise:

Memorandum of the estimated values of cotton and woollen dry goods adopted at the port of ——— for the months of January, February, March, and April, 1868, respectively.

Bleached and unbleached cottons* per yard	$0 20
Colored cottons* per yard	25
Ginghams	25
Woollen dress goods	30

These unsystematized, and in many cases diverse and erroneous estimates, are embraced in the returns and transmitted to the Department, where, unless palpably wrong, and formerly even when they were palpably wrong, they are received as official and authentic, and incorporated into the accounts without question. Some instances of the incredibilities that flowed from this practice were adduced by Mr. Wells, of the Revenue Commission, in the Commission's able and interesting report of 1865, p. 5. The imports of coffee for an entire year were returned at 10½ cents per pound, where the re-exports of the same article showed the extraordinary value of nearly 26 cents per pound, and the portion estimated to have been retained for consumption had a value of only $6\frac{4}{10}$ cents per pound. But scarcely one item among the several hundreds enumerated in the import entries' accounts during a long series of years was free from it; nor is this defect wholly remedied yet, though with the measures in hand it is soon expected to be.

The acceptance of these cooked accounts by the Department, and their unrevised compilation and subsequent publication, produced another mischief, (already alluded to,) a loss of respect on the part of the statistical clerks in the custom-houses and in the Department for the value of the work they were themselves employed upon. Each man knew that his own work was seriously incorrect, his items estimated and his balances forced.* Moreover, he knew that the work was never criticised, for after it had been transmitted to the Department, which it was, and generally without revision, too, he rarely heard any more about it. As a matter of course his belief in its value and usefulness, and that of the compilation of which it formed part, became a constantly diminishing quantity. So with the clerks in the Department; until, among all the persons engaged on the work, it came to be looked upon as a sort of superfluity, that was only of benefit to the extent that it provided them with employment—a conclusion that, with what has been shown of the erroneous practices in vogue, will not fall far short of common assent.

The extent to which these practices vitiated the quantities and values in the import entries' account is now beyond practical ascertainment, but it must have been very considerable.

The method taken to diminish their mischievousness has been to provide the compiling clerks in the Bureau with price lists, and to enjoin the collectors of customs to insist upon the entries made at their ports being properly filled out with quantities and values, as provided by the regulations.

ERROR OF OMITTING CERTAIN IMPORT ENTRIES FROM THE PROPER ACCOUNT AND RETURNING THEM IN THE DOMESTIC EXPORT ACCOUNT.

This form of error has been alluded to in another place. As it is of a kind very easily detected, there would be but small reason to suppose that it had been committed unawares to any serious extent had the Department accounts been entitled to the presumption of correctness. So far as is known, however, it has only occurred in a single district, and even had it passed undetected would have merely varied the annual total to the extent of a few thousand dollars, and changed the accounts of a few articles.

PRACTICE OF OMITTING FROM THE IMPORT ENTRIES' ACCOUNT THE RETURNS FROM CERTAIN DISTRICTS.

This practice, it is gratifying to be able to say, was one of the irregularities first observed and remedied, and it therefore does not vitiate the account of 1866–'67, though, as far as can be learned, that year's account stands alone in this respect among the import entries accounts for many years back.

The practice consisted of limiting the year's account to embrace just as many quarterly returns from the collectors of customs as the latter chose to send to the Department, taking it for granted that when the collectors had any returns to make they would make them, and the Department would receive them, and that when none were received at the Department, there were none to be made; in other words, leaving the completeness of the compilation to take care of itself. As a general thing, few of the large ports seem to have been omitted, though even this was not always the case. The San Francisco and New Orleans returns were omitted in the annual volume of 1865, and had to be appended to the volume of 1866. So with certain of the New Orleans returns of 1866, which, with certain others of inferior importance, are appended to the volume of 1867. But with regard to the smaller ports, it seems to have been the rule, not the exception, to omit their returns.

* Nearly a million dollars was erroneously forced into the item "unenumerated articles," the place where it is most difficult of detection, in the returns of a single district during the month of January, 1867.

Of course the omission of the returns from Southern ports during the war is not here alluded to. This was no error, but a misfortune; although even these might have been obtained after the war closed. These omissions were not observed until last November. As soon as observed an endeavor was made to repair them by requesting the present collectors to furnish the missing returns; with what success will be shown in another part of this Report. To what extent the omissions vitiated the import entries' account previous to July 1, 1866, has not been ascertained.

PURCHASED VESSELS ERRONEOUSLY OMITTED.

On reference to the acts of Congress approved during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1866, it will be perceived that 30 foreign vessels were admitted to American registry during that year. These transactions cannot but be regarded as imports of commodities from foreign countries, and they should therefore properly appear in the import accounts, which hitherto has not been the case. The combined admeasurement of the vessels mentioned is partly ascertained, partly estimated, to be 4,468 tons. At $60 specie per ton their combined value was $268,080. During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1867, there are no foreign vessels known to have been admitted to American registry.

OTHER ERRONEOUS PRACTICES CONNECTED WITH THE IMPORT ENTRIES' AND AUXILIARY ACCOUNTS.

Many other erroneous practices have been observed during the course of the investigations I have been enabled to pursue. Some appear to have arisen from negligent practices in the original entries, some from negligence in preparing the returns at the custom-houses, some from negligent compilation in the Department, and some from other causes. Some of these are briefly noticed herewith:

1. Error of including in-transit articles both in the in-transitu and the re-export accounts. A duplication of this kind to the extent of over $300,000 was detected in one month's returns from a single district. (Collector's letter, No. 11692.)

2. Omitting certain articles, as "manufactures of iron n. o. p.," and charging the omission to other articles, as "railroad iron." (Collector's letter, No. 27,437.)

3. Reporting transactions in one account (the re-export) at currency valuation, and the same transaction in another account (the warehouse) at sworn specie valuation. (Collector's letter, No. 9642.)

4. Neglecting to include a portion of the dutiable entries. (Collector's letter, No. 13497.)

5. Neglecting to include any of the entries of free goods. (Collector's letter, No. 27,101.)

THE OLD SYSTEM SUMMED UP.

One of the principal objects of these accounts—to ascertain the extent and annual course of our trade with foreign countries—has, however, not been entirely defeated by the great neglect to which they have been exposed. With the assistance capable of being derived from an analysis of the accounts kept by other governments, this important result can be attained, perhaps, in time for the next Annual Report.

Another important object, that of tracing the march of our commercial prosperity, is also within reach. The total annual values of our foreign trade, capable of being ascertained from the same sources, will permit an approximate annual comparison to be made which shall be relatively (though perhaps not absolutely) correct enough for the purpose;* but to those who would deduce from these accounts a favorable or an unfavorable balance of trade, and to whom it may prove an easy refuge from the discordant results shown to have flowed from the errors in which they have hitherto been involved, to conclude that one thing with another these errors will about "balance" each other, and that the totals as they stand sufficiently approximate correctness to answer all practical purposes; and likewise to those who, knowing the value these accounts possess, if correct, to mark the fluctuations of various industries, or the good or bad effects of legislation, or to estimate the productiveness of imposts or excises, may, even after this exposition, conclude that the errors in the account of an article in one year will likely enough show the same proportionate distortion as those in the account of the same article in another year, and that the relative annual movement will, therefore, be exhibited with tolerable truthfulness—it can only be repeated that the accounts as they stand for years prior to July 1, 1866, are entirely unreliable, while those for the year begun July 1, 1866, and ended June 30, 1867, though compiled with much more care and completeness, are nevertheless vitiated perhaps to a considerable extent by the erroneous practices alluded to, and which only commenced to be investigated, understood, and stopped when the compilation of the accounts of 1867 had been completed.

THE NEW SYSTEM.

The import entries under the new system are returned, compiled, and published monthly, usually about six weeks after the close of the period they embrace, and contain the returns from all of our customs districts from New Brunswick along down the coast to the Rio Grande; then up the Pacific coast to Puget sound, and lately even Sitka, in Russian America; and finally all the border districts across from Oregon to Maine, and the river districts from the Gulf of Mexico to Minnesota, and from Cairo, Illinois, to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

Under the old system of quarterly returns only an annual aggregate was published, and no subdivision of the year was shown. The publication was effected rarely less than six months, sometimes a year after the close of the

*Among the many purposes which these accounts serve when compiled correctly and published promptly, none is of more consequence than the guide they furnish to revenue officers in the performance of their official duties. The following extract of a letter lately received by the Director from one of the United States general appraisers affords an instance in point:

Extract of a late letter from the general appraiser of customs, at ——, to the Director of the Bureau of Statistics.

"In your Monthly Report No. 17, I see that a large importation of —— is reported in January and March of this year. I have not been able to learn of such arrivals, though I have written to other general appraisers to inquire. I would be greatly obliged for a statement of the ports at which the chief importations of the articles were made. We have made especial efforts to detect this importation here, as you may be aware, and have now several invoices under seizure for false entry."

The customs revenue is defrauded by the device of entering the article alluded to under a false nomenclature. This being exhibited in the statistical accounts, the matter is brought to the attention of the proper officer, and in this manner the localization, exposure, and punishment of the fraud is secured.

period it embraced. This, on the plan it was published, was equal to two years after the beginning of the period. The import entries' account under the new system has also been harmonized (always on the authority of corrected official returns from the collectors) with the other leading accounts compiled by the Bureau,* which formerly was not the case. But to contrast the "import" account now, with what it was before, furnishes no adequate measure of the changes effected. The whole system had to be reformed and revivified, a task many times more onerous than to organize a system entirely new.

It had been in existence forty odd years. It was started when the condition of the world's affairs and the needs of legislation were very different from what they are now, and when the day of its reform came it was found reduced to the last degree of degeneracy.

In 1821, the first year under the "old system," our net imports amounted to little over $41,000,000, and the question of the day most nearly related to the subject of our foreign commerce was on the recognition of the Spanish American States. Now the net imports are nearly $400,000,000, and in commercial affairs questions of nationalities have lost nearly all of their former significance.

On reference to the Commerce and Navigation volume of 1821, one of 165 pp. octavo, the number of titles of articles and classes of articles in the import account is found to be 78, and the number of titles of countries 56, while the number of customs districts at that time was 95. For 46 years these accounts were kept without change in plan—a plan that consisted simply of adding to the titles every article specially designated in every successive import schedule, and the name of every country having a national flag; overlooking the obvious fact that calling for more detail was equivalent to rendering the system less manageable, and less susceptible of supervision and correction. The result of this system, or more properly perhaps, lack of system, as to the accuracy of the accounts, and the delay attending their publication, has already been seen; its consequences as to the laboriousness of their compilation, and the expense this entailed, have yet to be alluded to. The volume of 1861, for example, contains 1,164 octavo pages of tabular matter, 698 of which are taken up alone by the "import" and auxiliary accounts. Page after page presents nothing but a formal array of blanks and printers' "leaders"—another feature of the system—a marked instance of which will be found in the "imports" by districts' table, on pages 255-422, of part 2. But the last book of the old system, the volume of 1867, is almost as happy an illustration of this extravagant plan as any of its predecessors.

It contains 704 octavo pages of tabular matter, of which the "import" and auxiliary tables take up 397. The number of titles of articles and classes of articles is 826; and the number of titles of countries of origin 10, and of origin and shipment 76—together, 86. Among the former is "all other candles, 2½ cents per pound," of which article we "imported," in 1867, one dollar's worth; and among the latter Equador, from which country our year's "imports" amounted to $62. The manuscript record account of the "import" and auxiliary tables contained in this volume, to say nothing of the manuscript transcripts prepared for the printer, nor of the record tables of the export, re-export, tonnage, and other accounts, consists of 35 volumes, 32 of which are 21 inches long by 18½ wide; and three of which, 30 inches by 21¾, containing together 10,404 pages, over half a yard wide, and together over three and one-half miles long; and yet when the Director commenced to cut down this overgrowth he was furnished with so many convincing arguments for letting it remain, as to render the accomplishment of this object the most unpleasant portion of his official duties. Both age and a long course of precedents had rendered the old system too respectable to be rudely assailed. An attentive study of its details, with a constant view to cutting off everything that upon examination was found could be dispensed with, was the only available plan of attack, and this has been followed throughout.

The erroneous practices alluded to have all been weeded out but two: 1. That of custom-house estimates; and 2. Diverse classification; and even these are now yielding to the influence of organization and system. None of the products of the American fisheries, nor American guano, nor the produce of the State of Maine; none of the in-transit and transhipment trade; no warehouse transportation entries, nor duplicated entries, nor any other improper classes of entries, are allowed to be thrown into the import entries' account to distort it and impair its value: nor are any omissions tolerated. Districts neglecting to transmit their returns are promptly reported for remedy of the delinquency; purchased vessels, admitted to American registry, are added to the account; and, in short, every care taken to make the accounts complete and correct.

The following table shows the import entries each month since January 1, 1867:

The import entries since July 1, 1867, the date of the commencement of the new system and of the current fiscal year, thus amount to $303,150,090, divided as follows: Gold and silver, $11,363,133; free merchandise, $12,936,355, and dutiable merchandise, $278,850,602; or, gold and silver, $11,363,133, and merchandise, $291,786,957. Estimating the months of May and June at $70,000,000 together, the result of the fiscal year's transactions will be, say, $373,000,000, or $40,000,000 less than those of the previous fiscal year, which amounted to $412,000,000 and odd.

From the above table it will be observed that the relation of gross imports to population has varied considerably from time to time. In 1790 they amounted to about $6 per capita; in 1800, to $17, (at this time we had a very large carrying trade, and more than half of this amount was re-exported within the year;) in 1810, to $12, (the carrying trade was still quite heavy, the re-exports amounting to $3½ per capita;) in 1820, to $8; in 1830, to $5½; in 1840, to $6; in 1850, to $7½; in 1860, to $11½; in 1866, to $13; and in 1867, to $12 per capita. The effects of the war of 1861–'65 are not correctly shown by these figures, the "imports" having been greater than as shown by the records of the Department. The trade since the war, however, has been unprecedentedly large, a consequence, doubtless, of the prolonged blockade of the southern ports and their sudden reopening. In 1866 our "imports" touched their highest point hitherto. They have since appeared to decline. In 1867 they fell $33,000,000,

Our import trade from Great Britain alone appears to amount to nearly half of our whole trade, while that from France and the North German Union is much inferior. This, however, is not the case, the appearance being due to the fact that the import entries are always credited to the countries of shipment, not those of origin, the latter being distinguished in the returns of indirect trade. Take the trade from the North German Union, for example, which in the above table is only shown at 26.7 millions. This is the amount entered here, which was shipped from the ports of the German Confederation, but in addition to this, considerable values from Germany were first shipped to Great Britain, and thence transhipped to this country. The following table exhibits the entire trade of the year from Germany:

		Other German States	352,402
	26,596,594		24,106,159

Total direct and indirect, $50,702,753.

Our indirect trade with France, Switzerland, and Belgium is likewise large. For recapitulation, see Commerce and Navigation, 1867, part I, page 282, and for details see pages preceding.

A comparison with the trade of 1860 presents no very remarkable features of detail. The trade with Japan and the Sandwich Islands shows an increase, while that with Mexico and South America exhibits a decline. The British and Canadian trade has improved over $50,000,000—more than the amount of difference between the total import entries of the two years; but it should be remembered, as before stated, that Great Britain does a large carrying trade for other countries, and so figures in our import entries' account, if this be regarded separately, to an undue extent.

It would be interesting to trace the changes which either more economical routes, or the influence of low rates of interest, are constantly bringing about in channels of trade; but the statistics on the subject are too recent to warrant generalization. The indirect trade statement shows the results both of the influence of the comparatively low rates of interest that prevail in Europe and of the routes that commerce has opened for itself, in defiance of political lines and boundaries. The products of Asia and Africa, which come to us through Europe, are deflected from a shorter and more direct route, mainly through the influence of low rates of interest, though not a little is due, perhaps, to other causes. The wines of southern Europe come to us through England, mainly because of the low rates of interest that prevail in the latter country; while the cloths, hosiery, and shelf goods of middle Europe find their way to us through Hamburg, Bremen, Havre, &c., for the obvious reason that these ports furnish the shortest and most direct routes for shipment.

The difference between our accounts and those of Canada demand attention in this place. In the Report on Exports it was shown that while, according to our account, the exports of domestic products to Canada amounted in 1865, 1866, and 1867 to 32.3 millions, specie value, according to the Canadian account of imports they amounted during the same period to 57 millions, specie value, or 24.7 millions more. This was ascribed to the shortcoming of our export account arising from a defect in the law of 1820. On the contrary, our import entries' account, according to the following table, shows that similar defects exist in the Canadian account of exports, and, indeed, this must always be the case, as it is hardly to be expected that the same care will be taken to report exports in countries where no export duties are levied as the requirements of the custom-house demand in the case of imports.

* 14.8 per cent. deficiency.

The most marked differences occur in the specie accounts; and on the presumption advanced, this is natural enough, specie being a commodity most likely to be omitted in the outward-bound manifests of shippers; still 84.6 per cent., 138.7 per cent., and 176.1 per cent. are unusually large discrepancies. As a singular exception to the rule that export accounts are deficient as compared with import accounts of the same shipments, the merchandise portion of the import entries of 1867 are deficient, as compared with the Canadian export account, to the extent of $3,420,942. Whether this is due to undervaluation, or to some other cause, has not yet been ascertained, the subject being still under investigation.

THE WAREHOUSE STATISTICS.

These valuable returns form one of the principal features of the new system. They show the stock in warehouse by districts, articles, quantities, and values, and the movement in warehouse, and the movements out of warehouse, by the same detail. The following is a summary by months since July 1, 1867. The details will be found in the various monthly reports already published:

* Corrections in collectors' returns.

This data is highly interesting. It shows that the stock in warehouse, columns 1 and 2, was highest in July, 50.7 millions, lowest in February, 39.4 millions, and commenced to rise in March, and was still rising at the end of April, when it was 42.3 millions.* It shows that of the import entries, warehoused on landing, column 2, the largest amount was in July, when it was 15.4 millions, from which it dwindled down to almost half the amount, or 8.8 millions, in December, and in two months' time, in March, rose to 17 9 millions. It shows that the business of transporting bonded goods from one district to another, columns 3 and 6, is greatest during the fall and winter months. It shows that the withdrawals for consumption, column 5, were largest in August, 14.6 millions, and September, 14.5 millions, (for the fall trade,) and in March, 14.2 millions, and April, 15.4 millions, (for the spring trade;) and smallest in December, 8 3 millions, and January, 9.9 millions. It shows that the withdrawals for re-export, both to the British provinces, column 7, and to Mexico, column 8, are mainly during the fall and winter, while the withdrawals for re-exportation by sea, column 9, considering their relative unimportance, appear not to differ very considerably from month to month throughout the year, varying from $866,000 in December to $420,000 in February. The enormous extent of these warehouse transactions, as a whole, may be inferred from the footings. On July 1, 1867, there were nearly 48 millions in warehouse. During the 10 months following 127 millions of import entries were added to this amount. Had these remained the stock would have amounted in April to 175 millions; but meanwhile 124 millions were withdrawn for consumption and 8.7 millions for re-export, leaving at the end of April a stock on hand of 42.3 millions.

STOCK IN WAREHOUSE.

What details this stock consisted of, until last July had not been known, it will be recollected, since the first two years of the warehouse system; an interval of nearly 20 years.† The account of stock on hand as balanced on 30th April last is published in Monthly Report No. 18. The total, as before stated, is $42,309,855, and the main items are coffee, $3,912,482; fruits, $976,111; hemp, $1,423,021; iron and manufactures of, $1,905,619; gunny cloth and bags, $485,132; leather, $694,636; salt, $236,084; sugar and molasses, $10,307,288; tea, $5,613,129; tin plate, $379,229; cigars, $122,273; wines, spirits, cordials, &c., $1,547,969; wool, raw and fleece, $1.109,415; and dry goods, $5,036,954. The quantities are, coffee, pounds, 42,300,624; hemp, tons, 5,689; pig iron, hundred-weight, 247,701, $105,099; leather, pounds, 3,402,281; salt, pounds, 108,968,170; brown sugar, pounds, 211,533,430, $8,920,558; tea, pounds, 20,507,326; tin plate, hundred-weight, 37,920; cigars, pounds, 73,529; spirits, in casks, gallons, 889,517, $810,835; wine in casks, gallons, 1,106,857, $488,527, and wool, raw and fleece, pounds, 7,668,714.

Though it is by no means felt confident that the account, as it at present stands, is entirely correct, (though for aught known it may be so,) the fact that it has been successfully placed on a proper footing after so long a neglect, is deemed to be worthy of mention, and more particularly because this, the largest and most complicated account, as well as, for a part of the time, the next largest and most complicated one, (the imports for home consumption account, next to be described,) has been compiled in this Bureau entirely by female clerks. In this respect, as in others, they have exhibited clerical abilities of a high order. It would be invidious to mention by name such of them as have especially distinguished themselves in this respect. Honorable mention is due to them as a class. It is hoped that to some extent this mark of approval may call more attention to their merits, and result in their being better repaid than they are for their services.

* This does not include the commodities which have paid duties and merely await removal from the warehouses by the owners. The value of such commodities is, however, comparatively small.

† At the Director's instance the stock books of all the warehouses in the United States were required to be posted up during the previous January and the results furnished to this Bureau. Owing to the extent of the undertaking this was not accomplished until 1st July. On that date the work was completed, and from that date the complete account kept in this office commences.

One of the prominent advantages of the revival of the warehouse account is the guide it must afford to intelligent legislation and administration. For example, when, as is often the case, it becomes desirable to estimate in advance the probable yield of the customs revenues for a given period of time, it can now be done within very narrow bounds, while the extent of the effect of projected legislative measures to diminish or increase these revenues within specified periods can be determined as well. If the tariff of duties on the importation of foreign commodities is designed to be raised or lowered, or the duty upon any particular article changed, if a treaty of reciprocity with a foreign nation is designed to be entered into or abrogated, or if the extent of our territorial area is designed to be changed, the effect of these measures upon the revenues can now for the first time be accurately foreseen.*

A brief sketch of this system may not be out of place here. Previous to the enactment of the warehouse law of 1846 it was required of the importers that they should pay, or secure to be paid, the consumption duties upon all dutiable commodities entered from foreign countries, at the time of their import entry. Upon the commodities being subsequently re-exported, the duties, under the name of bounties or drawbacks, were returned. This system appears to have been copied from the English, among whom it originated, probably at a very early date; for in the 17th century it falls under the censure both of Sir Josiah Child, 1668, and Sir Charles Davenant, 1695, and in their writings is made the object of invidious comparison with the laws on the same subject in Holland and France, where the whole of the duties levied on importation were allowed to be drawn back on exportation, while in England but "half subsidy"† was returned. The restrictions complained of were afterwards removed, and three years' time was allowed for the privilege of re-exportation with a drawback, while in the meantime it did not matter how often the goods may have changed hands if satisfactory documentary evidence of identity could be furnished. These usages, and that of giving credit to the importers for customs duties, materially tended to change the incidence of taxation from the act of landing to that of consumption, which appears to have been the object sought to be accomplished. This modified drawback system, however, was of too loose a nature to last unimpaired, for it opened the way to frauds of a character difficult either to prevent or detect.

It however seems to have furnished the germ of the warehousing system, which in England was first practically proposed in Sir Robert Walpole's excise scheme, in 1733; but at that time it met with so much opposition that it had to be abandoned. A similar proposal was afterwards brought forward by the Rev. Josiah Tucker, 1753, but in vain. Meanwhile the modern warehousing system appears to have been gradually developing from the modified drawback system

* On the 1st July, 1857, the day the tariff act of March 13, 1857, went into effect, there were in warehouse commodities to the value of some $60,000,000. In less than a year's time this stock fell to something under $24,000,000, the withdrawals having been mainly for consumption. On 1st May, 1864, the stock in warehouse was scarcely more than $7,000,000, the withdrawals during the previous month having amounted to nearly $20,000,000. The warehouses were so empty that during the month of May the withdrawals for consumption amounted to scarcely more than $1,000, yet, by the 1st of September following the stock rose to upwards of $50,000,000 of the 18th century. In 1700 the wrought silks of India and Persia (the use of which was prohibited within the kingdom) were permitted to be placed in fit warehouses for the purpose of re-exportation, on due security being given by the merchant for carrying out such purpose. In 1709 pepper was allowed to be deposited in "approved" warehouses on payment of half "subsidy." In 1742 rum was allowed to be warehoused under Crown locks and on bond being given for the payment of duty when taken out for home consumption, and shortly afterwards tea, rice, and tobacco, were treated upon the same footing.

† This did not always mean half the duties, because the duties sometimes consisted of several "subsidies," the moiety of but one of which was, up to a certain date, all that was remitted on a re-exportation.

The drawback systems were finally extinguished by the warehousing act of 1803, which, however, was materially enlarged and modified by subsequent regulations. In the year 1825, when the customs laws were consolidated by Mr. Hume's Eleven Acts, the system had nearly attained its present form and extension. In 1846 the United States abandoned the drawback and adopted the English warehouse system as a whole, and to the extent that it had developed up to that date. Since that time the system has undergone but little change in this country. In England, however, the modifications have been more important.

In the course of a few years' time the transit trade between Europe and Asia via the Pacific railroad will form a prominent feature of our commerce, and the consideration of this subject will doubtless assume more public importance than at present.

The real imports account now comes to be treated.

THE IMPORTS FOR HOME CONSUMPTION.

It will be recollected that this account consists of entries embraced in class A, free commodities; class B, dutiable commodities, which have paid duties on landing or inspection and been entered directly for home consumption; and class D, dutiable commodities in warehouse which have paid duties and are at liberty to be withdrawn from warehouse for home consumption.

The aggregate of these classes that passed the customs, inwards, within a given period of time, is what is embraced by the Imports for Home Consumption account. It is therefore an account, to the extent that it goes, whether that is greater or less, of the actual offsets to the exports, and shows the imports into the country that passed the point where duties are levied. As this account likewise shows the imposts that were collected, or which accrued upon each of the dutiable articles it embraces, it is called, as kept in this office, the "Imports for Home Consumption and Impost account."

As previously stated, no account of this kind has ever yet been published in this country. The establishment of the account was ordered in 1864, by Secretary Fessenden, but never carried out. The system of accounts established under the present management embraced this account, among others, and Mr. Fessenden's order was accordingly revived and put in force. The result is the first annual account of imports for home consumption, embracing the period from June 30, 1866, to July, 1867. This account is not yet quite ready for the press, its revival having been instituted nearly a year beyond the appropriate date for commencing the annual compilation. The account for 1868 will be completed nearly as soon. Before examining the details of this account it will be as well, perhaps, to institute a comparison between its footing and those of the import entries' account, covering the same period.

The total of the import entries' account for the year ended June 30, 1867, is $412,233,123,* while the total of the imports for home consumption account for the same period is $392,041,204. This shows that while commodities to the former amount were, according to the import entries' account, brought to the country, commodities to the latter amount, according to the imports for home consumption account, were imported into it for home consumption. The in transits and transhipment transactions should find no place in either account. They are not embraced in the latter. Here, then, is a difference between the two accounts for the same period of $20,191,919, the import entries' account being the larger.

Even had the import entries' account been correctly kept, there would almost necessarily be a difference between its results and those of the imports for home consumption account. For certain years one would be the larger, and for certain other years perhaps the other. How much of the difference shown in 1867 is due to this fact, and how much to the erroneous practices that became connected with the rendition and compilation of the former account, cannot be ascertained without entering upon those fields of estimate and conjecture which, within the present limits at least, are deemed better to be left out of view.

The following table shows certain of the principal articles imported for home consumption during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1867.

Together the duties on the articles specified amounted to over one-third of the total revenue from customs during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1867. It would be of great interest to quote from this important account at greater length, but I do not feel at liberty to do so until it is fully prepared for the press.

The instances above given are merely adduced in this place for the purpose of introducing the subject of sworn valuations, with which this Report will close. The remaining details of the account of imports for home consumption for the year ended June 30, 1867, will be found, when published, in one of the monthly reports of the Bureau. The amounts furnished above, may vary in some slight particulars, when the whole account is balanced and put to press.

SWORN VALUATION.

The duties upon the importation of foreign commodities, when not based upon quantity alone, are rated upon their market value at the foreign place of exportation, and this rule has always been maintained in the United States, except, I believe, during a brief period in 1842.

Whatever the advantages of this rule as a means of levying and determining duties, it must needs vitiate all the statistical accounts of the government in so far as the valuation of foreign commodities is concerned. It is needless in this place to enlarge upon the reasons of undervaluation. A very extended inquiry upon the subject was instituted under the Department circular of August 6, 1849, and the results published in the Secretary's report of that year.

Without touching upon the subject in its relation to the matter of taxation, it seems highly desirable that means should be provided for avoiding the erroneous and misleading results that flow from it into our statistical accounts. This view of the case long since attracted the attention of the British government and resulted in the establishment of a system of corrected valuations for statistical accounts which has met with complete success, and to which, in great measure, we are indebted for the ample and precise details of British commerce published under the direction of the Board of Trade.*

* The occasion of this reform (I am quoting from memory) arose out of the following circumstances:

During the reign of Charles II, a Book of Rates was published by the government, which, while announcing the duties on merchandise, in most, perhaps all, cases ad valorem, furnished rates of relation between quantities and values. For instance, the article of canary seed was subject on importation to pay a subsidy of five per cent. ad valorem. The value of the article per hundred-weight was officially fixed in the Book of Rates, say at £3 15*s*. The duties per hundred-weight would therefore amount to three shillings and ninepence. Andirons were rated at 10 shillings per pair, wood ashes at £6 per last of 12 barrels, and Spanish wine at £70 4*s* per tun. Now, while these valuations were perhaps correct enough

I can explain this system in no better manner than by appending hereto the text of a reply made to an inquiry of the House of Commons on this topic in 1865. See Appendix.

In penning this Report, it was designed to make it serve to some extent the purpose of affording to collectors of customs and others a clearer comprehension of the system of commercial accounts compiled in the Bureau, and the purposes they served, than could be derived from merely reading the laws and regulations upon the subject; and this is respectfully offered in extenuation of its prolixity.

The accounts which form the subject of it, taken together with others of the Treasury Department, go to make up the Balance Sheet of the country, "upon whose pages are inscribed those figures of cruel precision that point to prosperity or adversity, to wealth or poverty, to strength or weakness, to resources or debt. When its great columns of numerals are traced down to their final consummation, we then know how far it is safe to tempt further fortune, or to brave calamity. Here lies the grand residuum into which filters the whole history of a nation. There is no brevity so portentous as that which adds up the capabilities and resources of an entire people, in a sum of dollars and cents."

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALEX. DELMAR, Director.

Hon. HUGH MCCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Return to an order of the honorable the House of Commons, dated May 12, 1865, for copy "of memorandum by the inspector general of imports and exports, as to the method adopted for ascertaining the real value of the imports into the United Kingdom, issued by the statistical department of the board of trade in 1864."

in the middle of the 17th century, they became totally incorrect by the middle of the 19th; moreover, the old relation in price, of one article to another, in many cases, had become completely reversed; yet, up to within the present generation, the British official accounts of foreign commerce were actually compiled on the basis of these obsolete valuations. A few instances of the extent to which this system distorted the custom-house valuations are furnished herewith:

Memorandum by the inspector general of imports and exports, as to the method adopted for ascertaining the real value of the imports into the United Kingdom, (issued by the statistical department of the board of trade in April, 1864.)

The real value of the imports into the United Kingdom, as shown in the statistical accounts published under the authority of the government, is ascertained as follows:

1. In the case of certain articles—of those, namely, in regard to which the tariff prescribes that their value (either with or without a specification of quantity) shall be stated in the entry inwards at the custom-house—it rests on the declaration of the importers.

If the officer of customs to whom such declaration of value is tendered should see reason to question its correctness, he is entitled to require further evidence on the point, or he may satisfy his doubts by an examination of the goods.

The articles of which the value is ascertained by this method, however, are but few compared with the whole number of those included in the statistical registry, and they are generally of minor importance.

2. In the case of the more numerous and more considerable articles which are entered at the custom-house by quantity alone, the value exhibited in the statistical record is obtained by means of a process of computation which combines the quantity with the average prices of the several commodities.

The average prices thus employed are supplied to the inspector general of imports and exports, in part, by some of the leading merchants and brokers of the city of London, who willingly aid an operation so obviously serviceable to the public, in part by three gentlemen, who have special facilities for watching the course of the markets, and who receive a fixed remuneration from the treasury for collecting such prices in the ports of London, Liverpool, and Hull, respectively.

In striking the average price for each article regard is had to the specific distinctions under which it is exhibited in the tariff, these distinctions being of necessity observed also in the statistical registry, and not being in every instance identical with those which are commonly recognized in mercantile transactions.

As the same article, in many cases, varies widely in its market value, according to the country of which it is the produce, separate prices, applicable to the importations from the different countries, are in such cases required.

The rules which are required to be kept in view, in fixing the average prices, will appear more distinctly on reference to the annexed copy of an explanatory note, which was addressed to the merchants and brokers from whom assistance was sought at the time when the registry of real value was first established.

When the prices obtained from different sources are found to disagree, such disagreement, unless it be referable to some known cause, is made the subject of a careful investigation before the average is finally adjusted.

The average price of an article being fixed for a particular month for the ports of London and Liverpool separately—and, in the case of certain descriptions of merchandise, for the port of Hull also—the quantity imported into each of the ports is computed at the price belonging to it, and the mean value thus ascertained of the importations into the two or the three ports is adopted as the general rate of valuation for the importations into the kingdom at large.

The value attached to the importations of each article for the entire year is the sum of the values affixed to the importations of each successive month.

The manner in which the operation is effected is shown in the annexed table.

Explanatory note referring to a classified "List of articles imported into the United Kingdom for which rates of valuation are desired;" (addressed to merchants and brokers from whom periodical returns of average prices were requested.)

OFFICE OF THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF IMPORTS AND EXPORTS, December 30, 1854.

The object for which it is sought to attach rates of valuation to the various commodities enumerated in this list, is the ascertainment (as nearly as possible) of the true money equivalent of our imports, considered both collectively and in the detail of individual articles, and with reference as well to the trade carried on with particular countries and colonies as to the general commerce of the kingdom with all parts of the world.

The rates, when obtained, are to be applied to the quantities of the several commodities as they appear in the records kept by the inspector general of imports and exports, which records, being founded upon the entries passed by the merchants at the custom-house, exhibit the articles imported from all countries under those designations and distinctions, and those alone, which are recognized in the customs tariff.

Hence, estimates of value adapted to a different specification of the same articles, to varieties of fabric or degrees of quality of which the customs tariff takes no cognizance, would not be available for the purpose which this inquiry has in view.

On the other hand, it is important that any well-defined differences in the price of a commodity affecting the whole produce of particular countries should be noted, since a neglect of such differences would lead to a false representation of the comparative value of the trade carried on with those countries respectively.

What is required, therefore, is in general a single rate of valuation, but in particular instances more than one rate, corresponding as nearly as possible with the average market price of the article in the United Kingdom during a given period for each description of merchandise included in the accompanying list; a single rate wherever the same average price may be deemed fairly applicable to the importations from all countries alike; separate rates for the importations from different countries where the nature of the case requires that they should be so discriminated.

The distinctions which are conceived to be necessary in regard to the produce of particular countries are indicated in the list under the heads to which they belong, but a practical knowledge of the various commodities will probably suggest other distinctions of the same kind as necessary to be introduced, and point out some of those which are inserted as unnecessary to be retained.

The articles have been distributed into classes with the view of facilitating the process by which values are to be affixed to them. The division is of course an arbitrary one, and where it seemed that an article might almost indifferently be assigned to either of two classes it is inserted in both.
